OBITUARIES.

CHARLOTTE AMELIA MOORE.

Daughter of the late Paschal and Elizabeth Deroche, was born in Newburgh on February 9th, 1839.

In 1858 she married Charles Moore, and nine children blessed this union, viz., James Anna, Sarah A., John P., Hammel D., William, Charles Henry, Fred D., George and Jane. Her husband predeceased her in 1897.

Her whole life was spent in Newburgh, where, during all those years she formed a wide circle of friends. During the last few years deceased suffered greatly from diabetes, and in November last underwent an operation in Kingston General Hospital. The looked for relief did not come, and early in January a second operation was performed in Belleville General Hospital. For a time it was thought Mrs. Moore would recover, but early in February she began to sink rapidly and passed away on Sunday evening February 8th within an hour of her 75th birthday.

Deceased is survived by six children—John P. Moore of Newburgh, Hammel D. Moore of Windsor Mills, Que., Charles H. Moore of Lynn, Mass., William Moore of Trenton, Fred D. Moore of Winnipeg and Mrs. S. M. Sharpe, of Detroit.

Mrs. S. Shorey of Newburgh, Mrs. George Watts of Odessa, and Mrs. John McKay of Couer D'Alene, Idaho, are sisters, and Mr. H. M. Deroche, K. C., and Mr. W. P. Deroche of Napanee, are brothers of the deceased.

The remains were brought from Belleville on Tuesday the 10th inst., to the family residence in Newburgh and the funeral services were conducted in the Methodist church, Newburgh on Thursday the 12th inst., by Rev. C. W. Demille. Notwithstanding the extremely cold weather a large concourse of friends gathered in the church to pay their last respects to the deceased. The bearers were four sons—John, Hammel, William, and Charles Henry, a grandson, Alex. Moore, and a son-in-law, John Sharpe. The remains were interred in the Newburgh cemetery.

H. V. FRALICK

The sudden demise of Mr. H. V. Fralick came like a shock to many of our townsmen; but his intimate friends had been for a long time expecting it. Mr. Fralick was born at Morven in 1841 and was the son of the late Peter and Elizabeth Fralick. He was married in 1873 to Miss Jennie Gordanier, who survives him. H. V. Fralick was well-known in this community having passed his entire life among this people. The immense congregation which completely filled the spacious auditorium of Grace Church told of the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow citizens. Seldom have we seen a more representative assembly of our citizens at such a service. The flowers sent from the church and by loving friends testified to the sincere affection in which he was held. Mr. Fralick was a man of parts and his whole life was munity having passed his entire life among this people. The immense congregation which completely filled the spacious auditorium of Grace Church told of the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow citizens. Seldom have we seen a more representative assembly of our citizens at such a service. The flowers sent from the church and by loving friends testified to the sincere affection in which he was held. Mr. Fralick was a man of parts and his whole life was such as to command the respect of the entire community. His pastor said so truthfully—"He was an exemplary citizen and no one for a moment questioned on which side of the great moral question he stood—a question that touched the youth of the town. He wore the livery of his King." For some years he taught school in the municipalities adjacent to Napanee, then he joined the public school staff in town. For some years he was in business and was one of the most successful travellers in the Midland district. Mrs. Fralick has received many letters from business men with whom Mr. Fralick transacted business, all expressing their high appreciation of his business qualities and the high esteem in which they held him as a business man. He was connected with Grace church for many years and has held every office in the gift of the church. For years he was superintendent of the Sunday School and his efforts largely contributed to make Grace church a young people's church. Mr. Fralick was a kind, gentlemanly man, one whom you loved to greet on the street. We have lost one of our most esteemed citizens, but the community is richer because he lived. He leaves to mourn their loss his wife and one son, Herbert, two brothers, Miles in Colorado and John on the old homestead and four sisters, Mrs. Jacob Detlor, of Hamilton, Mrs. Perry of Kingston, and Misses Emeline and Eliza at home. He did not depend on one part of life to give character and value to the whole as though the virtues of one period would cancel the vices of another. He lived a beautiful, harmonious, consistent life as a citizen and as a christian.

Behold him: in the evening tide of life,

THE COLLECTION OF HISTORICAL MATERIAL

FOR THE LENNOX AND ADDINGTON
HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Society has now been collecting items of interest associated with the history of the County of Lennox and Addington and the Midland district for about seven years and during that time much interesting material has been given or loaned to the collection.

The officers are constantly hearing of further material that should be in our Archives. Some of this is being destroyed. Older residents have died and their old letters and papers have been scattered when they should have been sent to the Society. Every donation of this kind is carefully catalogued by the writer, and items of a personal nature which should be kept by the family are returned to those to whom they properly belong. It is hoped that relatives of our deceased pioneers will give the Society an opportunity of inspecting all material before destroying anything. A single sentence in an old letter may contain information regarding the early settlers, their schools, roads, buildings, methods of life or other habits that would be lost forever if that letter were not preserved.

We are particularly anxious to secure:

Letters
Photographs
Documents
Newspapers
Books
Account books
Newspaper clippings
Township and Village Minutes.
Utensils used in earlier days.

Every donation is carefully recorded in a book kept for that purpose and many objects of interest are entered by relatives in memory of the one who originally owned them.

The Society has now about eighteen thousand separate articles or papers and some day it aims to have a building devoted exclusively to the exhibition of the collection.

Don't destroy anything before giving it to the Historical Society an opportunity of passing upon it for its historical value.

Faithfully yours,
Clarence M. Warner.

Because of the suffering and ignominy heaped upon those who are the helpless victims of another's wrongdoing, and because it is conceded by all prison reform, that every prisoner should have at least an opportunity to regain his lost manhood, we, the W. C. T. U. of Ontario, have memorialized the Hon. J. C. Doherty, Minister of Justice, asking that a scheme be devised whereby prisoners will be so remunerated in a way that it will not compete injuriously with free labor; and that from such remuneration those dependent on the prisoner be sustained during the absence of the bread-winner. We earnestly appeal to you to further this scheme.

The Star of January 17th, says— "The second case was one of many in the city. The husband is in jail for his mis-behaviour. The real punishment has fallen on the wife and four children, aged 9, 6, 2 and 11 months. The father was warm and had food, although deprived of his liberty. His family had eaten the last scrap of bread some hours before the pastor heard of the case. There was no fire in the house at all. The little chap of four had his stockings feet folded up beneath him in an endeavor to get warm. He had no boots.

Will you send a post card to your M. P. at Ottawa for the sake of such as these and ask that their fathers be permitted to support them. "Inasmuch as ye have done it for the sake of one of those little ones ye have done it unto Me."

We also ask your aid in our anti-Cigarette campaign.

We do most heartily endorse the action of the Lord's Day Alliance and Moral Reform Association, who are working to secure legislation prohibiting the publication in newspapers of reports of entries and results of races, because this is the basis from which hand-book men work. We, therefore ask you reader, whoever you may be, to come to our aid. The vote and influence of every member of the House of Commons is needed. Will you send a postal card to your M. P. in Ottawa as soon as the House assembles, asking that these three measures receive his support, if they are brought before the House?

ward Grey Discusses Mexican Situation in Commons.

Foreign Secretary Says Steps Being Taken To Get at Facts Government Is Powerless To Any Action In Disturbed Mexico—Told Bryan That Public Trade Was Seriously Affected.

ON, Feb. 24.—The British House of Commons has been stirred by the recent killing of William A. A. British subject, by order of the Mexican Government, and the question of protection of British interests and for English shipping in Mexico was made the subject of earnest consideration. The House of Commons and members of the newspapers.

Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, outlined the situation of the British Government in the nature of the common sense which the British ambassador in Washington had had with the Government of the United States. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, outlined the situation of the British Government in the nature of the common sense which the British ambassador in Washington had had with the Government of the United States.

Foreign Secretary assured the House that the Government was taking possible steps to learn the truth in the Benton case, and to see protection for its nationals, but pointed out that the Government was powerless to take any action in the disturbed region.

Grey said: "The incident occurred in the States Government had at first impressed upon the leading Constitutional party in the necessity of respecting the rights of foreigners. I should like to say at the fact that we are coming with the Government of the United States does not, of course, at it has any responsibility has taken place."

Communication has been made to the United States alone can circumstances exercise any to discover the truth and be done. Juarez, is close to the United States frontier, and we have no means of exercising influence in those regions under circumstances. I am still in communication with the British ambassador in Washington and with the United States Government as to what steps can be taken."

Mr. Reese asked whether Sir Grey had any information of other Europeans who are missing in Mexico. Mr. Grey replied: "No, sir; but I have already telegraphed to Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, suggesting for his time what steps it would be to take in this very disturbed region to ascertain the whereabouts of these people."

Mr. Dyke Acland, Parliamentary Secretary for Foreign Affairs, made an earlier statement, in which he said:

"The situation of Mexico is an extremely serious one, and it is impossible to see any British intervention."

WILL EXAMINE PROJECT

G.-B Canal Must Be Commercially Sound, Says Rogers.

Minister In Important Announcement In Commons Says That an Honorary Commission Will Report on Commercial Feasibility of Scheme and If Finding Is Favorable the Work Will Be Rushed.

OTTAWA, Feb. 24.—That the Government would go ahead with the Georgian Bay Ship Canal when assured by the prospective commission of its feasibility as a commercial proposition, was the statement made in the Commons last evening by Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works.

The question was raised by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a formal motion for a copy of the petitions and representations received during the past two years by the Government in favor of the immediate construction of the canal.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, upon a motion of the return of papers in the House last night, discussed the Georgian Bay Canal. He said that, unfortunately, the House and country had been divided between the Georgian Bay scheme and the St. Lawrence-Welland route. He was in favor of both, and believed that the largely increasing production of the eastern country and the ever-growing commerce of Canada would tax both waterways.

At present a large portion of the western grain was being diverted to tidewater through American channels. Of 133,000,000 bushels of wheat grown in the west and exported to Europe during the season of 1913, 75,000,000 bushels had gone to New York via Buffalo, and only 58,000,000 bushels had reached Montreal. This, he thought, was largely due to the inadequacy of the Welland Canal, but there would be no possibility of diversion at all to American ports if Canadian grain could go by the French and Ottawa river route to tidewater at Montreal.

He said that he hoped that the Government would not appoint another commission. It was high time for some announcement of policy upon this important question.

Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, reminded the House that a great responsibility would be assumed by the Minister and the Government which decided upon the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. Up to date Canada had expended $135,000,000 upon her system of canals, and was committed to the sum of $218,000,000 for needed extensions. With these tremendous commitments for the St. Lawrence route, the Government might well take thought before embarking upon the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal.

The Minister said he was much struck by the statement of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as to the diversion of Canadian wheat to American ports.

It must be admitted that the Georgian Bay Canal would prove an effective cure, and as its engineering feasibility was now assured, the only remaining question was as to its feasibility from a commercial standpoint.

Many engineering commissions had been appointed, Mr. Rogers admitted, and no more were required, but he

KAISER INTERVENES.

Monarch's Interference Brings About Peace In Steamship World.

BERLIN, Feb. 24.—The intervention of the Kaiser, which was stated a week ago was mainly responsible for the conclusion of peace between the rival German shipping lines, has resulted, according to The Tageblatt, in a "community of interest" between the Hamburg-American and the North German Lloyd Lines covering a period of seventy-five years. Certain details still remain to be concluded, but the basis of peace is that both lines henceforth share equally both the North American passenger and freight business. The North German Lloyd Line hitherto has had the lion's share of the passenger traffic, while the Hamburg-American did the larger freight business. The peace treaty is also said to regulate the question of new ships that each line may in future build. It is expected that the "community of interests" will result in a large saving of operating expenses on both lines.

It is stated in Berlin that yesterday's negotiations in London have resulted in a definite prolongation of the international pool for five years.

Pool Is Extended.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—A full conference of the North Atlantic steamship lines was held here yesterday, and practically resolved to renew the North Atlantic pool for another five years, the reservation being made that several unsettled questions should be discussed in the next few days. Should these questions be found impossible of settlement the renewal of the pool will hold good only for the current year.

Committee Named to Deal With Purity In Elections.

OTTAWA, Feb. 24.—Hon. C. J. Doherty, Hon. Charles Murphy, A. K. Maclean of Halifax, W. B. Northrup, James McKay of Prince Albert, F. D. Carvell and J. A. Robitoux have been named a committee in connection with a resolution of which the Minister of Justice has given notice that he will move in the Commons to amend the laws regarding electoral purity. This is the result of the promise made by the Premier last week in the House that such would be done.

Mr. Doherty's resolution provides for the appointment of the select committee named above to consider all suggested amendments to the recent Election Act, with a view to making more stringent the laws against bribery and corruption.

It must be admitted that the Georgian Bay Canal would prove an effective cure, and as its engineering feasibility was now assured, the only remaining question was as to its feasibility from a commercial standpoint.

Many engineering commissions had been appointed, Mr. Rogers admitted, and no more were required, but he thought the Government should go ahead with the commission whose appointment had already been fore-shadowed. If that commission reported favorably upon the scheme as a commercial enterprise the Government would at once undertake the construction of the Georgian Bay ship canal.

P. E. Lamarche (Con., Nicolet), E. B. Devlin (Lib., Wright), and Gerald White (Con., N. Renfrew) also spoke in advocacy of the Georgian Bay scheme.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, in moving for the papers in connection with the purchase of a site for the new Montreal barracks at Lachine, said that he would probably have occasion, after examining the papers, to make a charge against the Minister of Militia and Defence, and to demand a drastic investigation. He declared that the Militia Department had purchased an inconvenient and undesirable site, and had paid more than twice what the land was really worth.

According to Hon. Mr. Lemieux's statement, the middlemen was a Montrealeur who made over a hundred per cent. profit in his deal with the Government. A portion of the land had been purchased only 16 days before its transfer to the Government.

Hon. Col. Hughes invited a full investigation and denied that the site was undesirable. He asserted that, so far as transportation went, the site was more convenient than the old one, being reached by a number of suburban trains and street car lines. The Longueuil site, on the other hand, was across the river from Montreal and an unhandy place to get to. The land was worth all the Government paid for it and no property in the neighborhood could be secured for less than $1,200 an acre.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The House of Lords yesterday unanimously adopted a motion by the Earl of Selborne that contributions to party funds should not be considered in awarding honors. The House of Commons will be asked to concur.

Viscount Milner, the Marquis of Lansdowne and other notable Unionists, supported the motion.

The Marquis of Crewe formally denied that the present Government had been influenced by money considerations in recommending to the King those upon whom titles were to be conferred.

CABINET EXONERATED.

French Ministry Upheld In Revelations Concerning Army.

PARIS, Feb. 24.—The French Chamber of Deputies yesterday adopted by 285 against 25 a vote of confidence in the Government, based on an interpellation by the Socialists on the state of health of the French troops. From numbers of garrisons reports had reached the War Office of widespread epidemic of measles, scarlatina and cerebral spinal meningitis, which in many cases had been fatal. The Chamber ordered the continuation of enquiry into the sanitation of the barracks to be carried out by the commission of health appointed by the Government. It was pointed out that the barracks were overcrowded owing to the large increase in the army brought about by the recent adoption of the three years' term of service instead of two, as formerly.

Great interest was manifested by the public in the subject under discussion and yesterday's sitting was regarded as the most critical one which the Government had had to face.

Colored Wigs Appear.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Colored wigs to match the gowns they wore were introduced in New York Sunday by two actresses. The appearance of the latest fad from Paris created a sensation in two fashionable uptown hotels, and there was some comment and some remarks. Under the latter heading, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the suffrage leader, expressed a philosophical view. "To say the least, they are frank," Mrs. Shaw said. "They do not pretend to be what they are not."

One of the young women wore a green wig to match a Nile gown, and the other a purple one that blended with her plum-covered suit.

Fourteen Sailors Drowned.

WEXFORD, Ireland, Feb. 24.—The survivors of the crew of the wrecked Norwegian bark Mexico were yesterday taken off the barren island on which they had landed on Saturday, and where they had been since then without food. Altogether 14 men were drowned in the various attempts made to rescue them.

FATHER TELLS STORY.

Peter McGibbons' Version of Murder Received With Tittering.

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE, Que., Feb. 24.—A story of having been shot in the leg and beaten as he lay helpless was told on the witness stand in the McGibbon murder trial here yesterday by Peter James McGibbon, father of the accused, Leonard McGibbon.

Many of the statements of the witness, in explanation of the events of the tragic August day when his son, it is alleged, killed his nephew, were received with incredulous tittering. The prisoner sat dejectedly at the bar and all the time his father was on the stand never raised his head.

Witness said he did not see the fatal shot fired, though he distinctly saw the victim aiming a second shot at himself while he lay on his back. He denied assaulting his niece, Elizabeth McGibbon, sister of the victim. In cross-examination he admitted that the accused walked around his prostrate form toward his cousin, who was later shot.

PETROLEA, Feb. 24.—G. Culham, assistant representative of the Department of Agriculture for Lambton, has returned from a tour of Bosanquet Township, where he made a search for San Jose scale. He found no trace of the scale, but a pest almost as bad was discovered in the black rock conker, which is devastating some of the best northern orchards.

"Out of the hole," replied the pupil, with an air of triumph.—New York Globe.

A BOOMERANG REPORT

Partisan Report of the N. T. R. Scandal
Hunting Commission Discloses Whole Tory Plot Against the People's Road.

The report of Mr. F. P. Gutelius, ex-C.P.R. Divisional Superintendent and now General Manager of the I.C.R. at $29,000 per year, and of Mr. Geo. Lynch-Staunton, whose long services to the Conservative party are well known, on the National Transcontinental Railway, was tabled in the House of Commons last Tuesday under peculiar circumstances. No report by a Royal Commission, with so obviously partisan a purpose and so open to criticism on almost every point, was ever tabled in the Commons under similar conditions and with the motive underlying it so apparent.

Although the commissioners have had two years to prepare the report and although their actual investigations ceased months ago, the report was brought down in type-written form and was immediately whisked away to be printed by the thousands of copies, before any Liberal member of Parliament had a chance to see it and examine the evidence on which the commissioners' conclusions were founded. Meanwhile the partisan press report prepared and handed out by the Government is all the country has to go upon. This latter report carefully edited and amended by the Government itself with a view to taking the utmost political advantage of the alleged "scandal," has been exploited by the Government press to the fullest extent, the obvious intent being to impress the public mind with the idea that there has been a deliberate waste of many millions in the construction of the road and to let that impression sink in before the Liberals are given a chance to read the report of the commissioners themselves or to discuss it on its merits in Parliament. That is the first bit of unfairness tending to throw suspicion on the bona fides of the whole report.

But that, perhaps, is the least suspicious circumstance. There is a whole series of synchronizing events showing with increasing clearness the motive underlying the whole report. In the first place there is the personnel of the investigating commission. Mr. Gutelius was selected as one of the commissioners from the ranks of the C. P. R. officials and as such would naturally be prejudiced against the National Transcontinental from the outset. He was "loaned to the Government," as the Minister of Railways said, for two years. He was placed in charge of the I.C.R. at a salary of $20,000, a very big increase over what he had been receiving before from the C.P.R. Mr. Lynch-Staunton has been a well-known Tory lawyer for years and has received many lucrative retainers from the party. For their work in preparing the report Mr. Gutelius received the huge sum of $27,465 and Mr. Lynch-Staunton got $24,038, in addition to their large earnings from other sources while the report was being prepared. Under the circumstances, a report suitable to the political requirements of the Government might have been expected.

the House. Another departure from the agreement has been in regard to the Quebec terminals. Without the consent of the G. T. P., and in spite of its protests, the Government has now entered into an agreement with the C.P.R. for union terminals, practically controlled by the C.P.R. President Chamberlain has been from the first against this, and has formally protested to Major Leonard and the Government that the cost of the union terminals to suit the C.P.R. would be over $8,000,000, was needlessly expensive, and the change would never satisfy the G.T.P. Thus all along the G.T.P., though a partner to the Parliamentary agreement in regard to the National Transcontinental has been ignored and the Government has proceeded as though it desired to make it both probable and possible that the G.T.P. would be driven to back out of its bargain for the operation of the road from Winnipeg to Moncton. Finally comes the report of the commissioners, with the intimidation dragged in, that the G.T.P. would never be able to pay rental at three per cent on the cost of construction. All this, again, is pleasing to the C.P.R. and a lot of it seems to be designed to effectually kill the idea of public ownership in Canada.

As to the commissioners' conclusions in regard to the alleged waste of $10,000,000 in the construction of the line, even partisan press reports prepared by the Government, which is all that the public has to go by at the present moment, show that if Parliament had decided to construct a cheaper road, instead of the best railway on the continent, it could have been built for less money. As for the "economies" which Messrs. Gutelius and Lynch-Staunton say should have been exercised in substituting heavier grades, sharper curves and temporary structures, it may be noted that every railway on the continent is now engaged in spending many millions in eliminating the very things that these commissioners would impose upon the National Transcontinental. On the I.C.R. itself, vast sums are now being spent by the Government in eliminating grades and curves and in substituting steel bridges for wooden trestles. Considerably over half of the alleged "waste" is accounted for by the suggested lowering of the standard of construction. One item of $8,000,000 alleged "waste" is said to be the profit received from contractors by sub-letting. No details of this are given, but merely the bald statement. It may be noted that the process of sub-letting by big contractors who are responsible for the carrying out of the whole work and who assume all risk of loss, is common to railway construction all over the world. It is now being followed even under the auspices of the present government in regard to the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway where the whole line is being built by one contractor, who is sub-letting the various portions of the line to smaller contractors. If the principle is wrong in regard to the National Transcontinental, surely it is wrong in regard to the Hudson Bay Railway.

One more important phase of the report that must be borne in mind is that there is no specific charge of graft or dishonesty made against any Minister or official of the Laurier Government. If there had been discoverable any single instance of graft or dishonesty it is certain that it would have been promptly pointed out and used to the fullest extent for political purposes. It is significantly announced in the Government press that no attempt will be made to recover any part of the $10,000,000 alleged to have been "wasted."

The real issue before Parliament and the people in regard to the report is as to questions of policy rather than as

ELECTORIAL CORRUPTION UNMOLESTED.

PREMIER BORDEN SIDESTEPS VITAL ISSUE RAISED BY LIBERALS IN PARLIAMENT.

The singular indefiniteness of Premier Borden's speech in the Commons debate on electoral corruption on Wednesday last is significant. The debate was non-partisan and had to do with a subject which is admittedly of vital importance in Canada to-day. Under these circumstances, any Premier would have been expected to speak out strongly and definitely. Boldness and definiteness were especially to be expected from Mr. Borden since in Opposition he had been so vigorous in his denunciation of corruption and specific in his suggestions as to the steps which should be taken to stamp it out.

Unfortunately, however, Mr. Borden chose to content himself with a speech which not only lacked definiteness of statement but totally lacked any reference to steps which, in Opposition, he declared it was of first importance should be taken.

Before 1911 Mr. Borden insistently demanded the appointment of an independent prosecuting officer for trials in the Dominion. He pointed to the delay which so frequently occurs in the hearing of election trials and to the perniciousness of "saw-offs." To prevent these evils and to hasten the punishment of wrongdoers, he declared the appointment of a prosecuting officer was absolutely necessary. By insinuation, if not by actual statement, he suggested that the Liberal Government merited severe condemnation for failing to bring about such an appointment. In his Halifax platform, and on other occasions, he pledged himself to appoint a prosecuting officer for election cases if he gained power.

In his Opposition days Mr. Borden had as another favorite theme the necessity of publicity as to campaign expenditures and the prevention of contributions to such funds by corporations and contractors. He spoke with vigor and seeming sincerity of the need for action in this direction.

Mr. Borden gained office in 1911 in a campaign in which the party he led had at its command the most enormous campaign fund in the history of Canadian political contests. In itself the existence of that huge fund cast doubts on Mr. Borden's sincerity. Those doubts have been confirmed by events since he became Premier. His speech in the recent debate gave further proof of his insincerity.

Not one word did he say in that debate regarding the appointment of an independent prosecuting officer to expedite the hearing of election causes.

Not one word did he say as to the publicity regarding campaign funds or as to contributions from corporations and contractors.

The record of by-elections since Mr. Borden became Premier has been one marked by the most outrageous corruption practised on behalf of Government candidates. Expenditures have been made by the Government organization which point clearly to the existence of great election funds to which, no doubt, the corporations and other special interests friendly to the Government have been generous contributors. In several cases the hearing of protests arising out of the elections had been delayed deliberately by the lawyers of the Government organization. If Mr. Borden had been sincere in his desire to stamp out these evils, surely they could not have been so glaringly evident during his regime as Premier nor could they have existed if the Government organization was not a party to them. The facts are telling comment not upon the insincerity of Mr. Borden.

ORIGIN OF A NOTED PHRASE

"I'd Never Allow the Constitution to Come Between Friends."

In one session of the legislature New York city Democratic representatives were split into two camps there were two rivals for leadership. One of these was a thoroughly hearty, happy-go-lucky person was afterward for several years in congress. He had been a local trader and was called Judge. He was always willing to vote for any member's bill himself, and he regarded it as narrow minded for any one to oppose one of his bills, especially if opposition was upon the ground that it was unconstitutional.

On one occasion he had a bill introduced for the relief of some miscreant whom he styled "one of the young men of the state." When planned to him that it was clearly unconstitutional he answered, "Me if the constitution don't touch things like that," and then added an incriminating smile, "Anybody never allow the constitution to between friends."

At the time I was looking over tainers received many lucrative offers from the party. For their work in preparing the report Mr. Gutelius received the huge sum of $27,465 and Mr. Lynch-Staunton got $24,038, in addition to their large earnings from other sources while the report was being prepared. Under the circumstances, a report suitable to the political requirements of the Government might have been expected.

In the next place it may be noted that one of the first acts of Mr. Gutelius as General Manager of the I.C.R. was to raise the rates on the people's railway in the Maritime Provinces. That was, of course, pleasing to the C.P.R., which competes with the I.C.R. and it also paved the way for the policy of handing the I.C.R. over to the C.N.R. as is said to be seriously contemplated by the Government. Then there came the agreement entered into by Mr. Gutelius with the C.P.R., the company which "loaned" him to the Government, giving the latter road a very cheap rate for its trains over the I.C.R. to Halifax. His whole administration of the I.C.R. has certainly not tended to popularize Government ownership and operation of railways but it has increasingly popularized him with the C.P.R.

Meanwhile it must be borne in mind that Major Leonard, also a former friend of the C.P.R., had been made head of the National Transcontinental Commission in place of the former commissioners. Acting under instructions from the Government he proceeded to immediately change the character of the National Transcontinental and to depart from the policy laid down by Parliament and twice endorsed by the electors of Canada. What these changes were are summed up in a letter written by President Chamberlain of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Major Leonard as follows: "I learn that the standard of the work is being departed from and instead of 4-10 grades and permanent structures you have authorized grades at 1 per cent. and the construction of temporary wooden structures. I beg to state if this work is done in accordance with what I understand to be your recent instructions, it will not be in compliance with the agreement nor satisfactory to this company and cannot be accepted."

From that position Mr. Chamberlain never receded and that the road is being completed with heavier grades and sharper curves and less permanent structures than was intended by Parliament has been amply proven by the correspondence thus far submitted to honesty is certain that it would have been promptly pointed out and used to the fullest extent for political purposes. It is significantly announced in the Government press that no attempt will be made to recover any part of the $40,000,000 alleged to have been "wasted."

The real issue before Parliament and the people in regard to the report is as to questions of policy rather than as to questions of honesty, and in regard to the desirability of public ownership of the National Transcontinental as against the wishes and the interest of private railway corporations and monopolies. The Liberals in Parliament are quite ready to discuss the whole report on its merits. Instead of being a bombshell in the Liberal camp the report is very likely to be a boomerang against the Borden administration and the corporate interests which control it.

ANOTHER BLOW TO LABOR. PREMIER TAKES ADVANTAGE OF TECHNICAL RULES TO KILL EIGHT-HOUR-DAY BILL.

Every day seems to add its quota of indisputable evidence that the Borden administration is a Government of the Big Interests. Its latest performance under the admonition of its ring-masters is the slaughter of Labor's eight-hour-day bill by a new and technical operation of the Parliamentary rules. The measure, which was introduced by Mr. Alphonse Verville, the Labor member for Maisonneuve, provided for a statutory workman's day of eight hours on all public works in Canada. The labor member introduced the bill at the opening of the session when it secured its first reading. It then stood upon the order paper for second reading, the stage at which Parliament commits itself either for or against the principle of the proposed enactment.

The rules of Parliament provide that such public bills introduced by private members shall have right of way for the first four Thursdays of each session. Heretofore, when Parliament formally opened on a Thursday such day was not included in the four Thursdays governed by the regulation, upon the reasonable deduction that the initial day, which is devoted almost solely to social ceremonial and upon which no opportunity is given for the transaction of any legislative business by private members, should not be counted. Following precedent the Labor member arranged to proceed with his Labor bill on the fourth working Thursday of the session. He was amazed, however, upon that day, to find himself confronted by a ruling of the Premier, endorsed by the speaker, to the effect that the time for consideration of such measures as his eight-hour-day bill was deemed to have expired. To do this the Government included the opening day upon which the speech from the throne is presented to both Houses by the Governor-General in the Senate chamber.

Mr. Verville made a vigorous protest in the Commons against the new ruling and charged that it had been instituted in order to shut out Labor's measure. But it availed him nothing. The Government is well satisfied with its new ruling. It has enabled it to "kill two birds with one stone." The eight-hour-day bill, which is actively opposed by its friends the Big Interests, has been waylaid and slaughtered, and the embarrassing measure to repeal the Laurier Naval Act, introduced by Mr. L'Esperance, as a club to further the Forget enterprises, has suffered a like fate by the same ruling. Great are the Big Interests in Canada these days.

organization. If Mr. Borden had been sincere in his desire to stamp out these evils, surely they could not have been so glaringly evident during his regime as Premier nor could they have existed if the Government organization was not a party to them. The facts are telling comment not upon the insincerity of Mr. Borden.

His remarkable silence as to campaign funds and as to the appointment of a prosecuting officer during the Commons debate of Wednesday last, is another evidence of that insincerity. More than two years in office, he has not redeemed his pledge to remove the electoral laws. He does not even forecast now any action of the kind he had promised when in Opposition. He consented to a Liberal motion for a committee to inquire into the question of electoral reform, but he did not even suggest that the committee should endeavor to frame provisions which would check corporation contributions to campaign funds or bring about the appointment of a prosecuting officer.

Mr. Borden is in power now. The corporations are friends of his party because that party does their will. Mr. Borden's Minister of Elections is an "expert" in trickery of the gross Manitoba kind of electoral rascality.

These are the reasons why the Premier fails to make good his pre-election pledge regarding political corruption. The evils have not become less, but rather they have become greater since Mr. Borden took office and he does not propose any effective action to check corrupt methods which help his Government in elections.

BUSY TAIL OF A WHALE.

Legend of the Origin of the Idea of the Screw Propeller.

The following extraordinarily interesting story is printed by the Marine Journal with the express stipulation that it cannot guarantee its authenticity, but gives it for what it is worth:

"Way back in 1858 the stout Dutch bark Groote Marie, Captain Van der Broeck, bound from Amsterdam to the East Indies, became dismantled in trying to round the Cape of Good Hope and, because of high seas, was in a generally bad plight. Just as things were looking particularly black an investigation of a terrific blow received by the vessel on her high, square stern revealed the fact that a large whale had crashed partly through the rear boards and had got caught in the timbers. Fortunately water which was pouring into the aft hold was promptly blown out through the open hatchway by the struggling animal, and in endeavoring to release itself the big mammal lashed the water with its tail so violently that it propelled the bark ahead at seven knots an hour into Cape Town harbor.

"It was in watching the mighty effect of the whale's tail that the good captain conceived the idea of a screw propeller, but neither the Dutch merchants of Cape Town nor his brother skippers of Amsterdam were sufficiently interested in his tale to unite with him in patenting the device."

FATHER OF PSYCHOLOGY

Theory of Dr. David Hartley, the famous English Philosopher.

The first attempt to explain psychological phenomenon on physiological principles was made by Dr. Hartley, the English philosopher was born in the year 1705. In his work, "Observations on Man Frame, His Duty and His Excursions," published in 1749 after investigation covering sixteen years elaborated his epochal theory.

By the development of his law of association and chiefly by the law of inference he accounted for all the phenomena of the mental constitution. According to him, the white matter of the brain, spinal cord and the nerves proceeding from it is the immediate instrument of action and motion. When a sensation has been frequently experienced it acquires a tendency to repeat itself automatically.

Ideas are but these repetitions of sensation and in their turn call other ideas. Thus the sight of an apple recalls an idea of its taste; this recalls other associated ideas in this way Hartley accounts for all human emotions.—Milwaukee Sentinel

GREEDY FOR GOLD

India a Glutton In Swallowing Up
the Yellow Metal.

HOARDS IT LIKE A MISER TOO.

Millions on Millions In Bullion and Golden Coins Flow Into That Country Every Year, Hardly Any of Which Returns or Is Ever Seen Again.

A steady stream of gold has been flowing for centuries into India. One might say streams of gold flowing thence, for since India produces comparatively little gold herself she lays the whole world under tribute. Hardly any of this gold returns. It is as if the earth of India had opened and swallowed it up. The American tourist in India who parts from a sovereign or a five dollar gold piece may be pretty certain it will go straightway out of circulation and nevermore be seen in the country of its minting. In one year alone India has been known to import over $300,000,000 in bar gold and English sovereigns.

What has become of this vast accumulation of gleaming treasure? To what use is all this gold put, since India has not minted a gold coinage of her own for many generations? The puzzle becomes a bit curious when it is remembered that as a whole the three hundred odd millions of natives refuse absolutely to deposit their savings, gold or otherwise, in banks and will take no part financially in such productive enterprises as railroads, irrigation works or factories.

The sharpest and most astute get-rich-quick bucket shop-artist that ever soaked a gullible occidental public could no more beguile the mild Hindu to buy a share of stock with the glittering promise of a thousand point rise in value than the government has been able to induce him to invest in solid guaranteed bonds.

It has been estimated that "the visible
hoarded wealth of India in temples, the treasure chests of princes and in the jewelry of the Indian men and women amounts to $1,800,000,000"—a simple portable treasure that would look like a pretty respectable pile even for our day and make the old time buccaneers set sail for India in a hurry. Part of this any American tourist can see for himself in such toys
as the two gold canons of the gack-war of Baroda, each containing 280 pounds of pure gold, and from glimpses caught of temple images of solid or thickly plated gold and blazing with jewels. As a special favor he may be permitted to glance within the iron bound treasure chests of some highness and plunge his arm to the elbow
in ancient gold mohurs.

But this would hardly account for the greater part of that golden current set toward India since the beginning of the record. It is into the earth that current sinks, year after year for hundreds of them, to be forgotten or lost trace of in the violent social upheavals, plagues and famines that have swept over the country. In India man has but to relinquish his fight against the jungle growth for a short space to result in the tearing down, overwhelmed and other obliteration of all

EATING AND ELOQUENCE.

An Englishman's Protest Against Post-prandial Garrulity.

All men eat, most men speak; but,
though all men eat a dinner, only the few speak after it, while the many listen and suffer.

To say that eating and eloquence go hand in hand may be a sociocism, but it is a fact, at any rate a condition, in these days and these latitudes. After dinner speaking is an evil peculiar to no land. It is an affliction that obtains a wider vogue in civilized countries than in those that are still close to the primitive ideal. The savage has not reached that stage of degeneration where he imagines that the processes of digestion are aided by discussion and stimulated by dullness.
The primitive man clings to tobacco and repose as the pleasurable adjuncts of his victuals.

Postprandial garrulity reaches its most virulent development among the English speaking peoples. It has become almost a ritualistic and religious function with them, and the resolute Englishman or American goes to his feeding function, his banquet, to eat, drink and be talked at seriously and

THE KING IS KING.

No "Power Behind the Throne" In England, It Is Said.

It is often asked who really inspires
the king's attitude upon current questions of the day and, more particularly, who writes his speeches?

The king takes, it is possible to state, the closest interest in every leading question of the day, and, while he must of necessity take the advice of his responsible ministers, he has views of his own that he does not hesitate to pronounce whenever the occasion calls for it, while his speeches he
"roughs out" entirely by himself.

This draft of what his majesty desires to say is then passed on to the officials of the private secretaries' office, who prepare the speech in set form and submit it to his majesty in formal language. This he goes through most carefully, and it often takes two or three rewritings before the king is thoroughly satisfied with it.

It may be said at once, however, that no words uttered by the king are approved until they have passed his most careful scrutiny. It is likewise possible to add that his majesty is an extremely good impromptu speaker and

HER OF PSYCHOLOGY.

of Dr. David Hartley, the famous English Philosopher.

first attempt to explain psychophenomenon on physiological basis was made by Dr. David Hartley, the English philosopher, who lived in the year 1705. In his great "Observations on Man—His Duties and His Expectations," published in 1749 after patient gation covering sixteen years, he treated his epochal theory. The development of his law of association and chiefly by the law of transference he accounted for all the phenomena of the mental constitution. According to him, the white medullary matter of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves proceeding from them, immediate instrument of sensation and motion. When a sensation is frequently experienced it acquires a tendency to repeat itself spontaneously.

Butler had a new cook, who was a buxom negress. She came one day, and after she had been assigned to her duties the mistress asked her,

It may be said at once, however, that no words uttered by the king are approved until they have passed his most careful scrutiny. Didn't Stop.

A young man who was with a party of motor tourists making a trip through the mountains decided to stop over in an attractive place for a few days and went into the hotel to ascertain the rates.

"What are your rates?" he inquired.

"Seven dollars a day, sir," was the reply.

"If I stay," went on the man, "I shall want a room on the parlor floor."

"That will cost you $1 extra," said the clerk.

"I shall also want a room with a fireplace, where I can have a fire these chilly evenings."

"One dollar more, sir."

"And, of course," said the tourist, "I want one with a bath also."

"A dollar additional, sir."

"Well," said the man thoughtfully, "how much will you charge to let me leave the hotel just as I am?"—Pulitzer Magazine.

"Good Morning!"

When we are at our best a flood of life pours itself out in the simple old words "Good morning!"—a flood of meaning which strains to express itself in a thousand ways, but has to be content with verbal symbols. Our physical and vital energies, our love, our playfulness, our stores of gratitude for the world's past gifts, all that is calling us toward the future, comes rushing out in the time mellowed greeting. The depths of us, the concentrated and imprisoned energy of our inmost life, calls across the distance to the unseen depths of our fellow.—Atlantic.

Schoolboy Aspiration.

A schoolboy wrote the following essay on soap: "Soap is a kind of stuff made in cakes what you can't eat. It smells good and tastes orful. Soap always tastes worse when you get it in your eye. Father says Eskimose don't never use soap. I wish I was an Eskimose!"

...ing of the record. It is into the earth that current sinks, year after year for hundreds of them, to be forgotten or lost trace of in the violent social upheavals, plagues and famines that have swept over the country. In India man has but to relinquish his fight against the jungle growth for a short space to result in the tearing down, overwhelming and utter obliteration of all his work. Therefore it is scarcely a flight of imagination to picture the black cobra nesting in some hole of ruined temple masonry stuffed with gold and jewels or the tiger seeking a lair in the dazzling throne room of a long forgotten dynasty buried in the jungle.

For the reason of this curious gold problem of India apparently one has not far to seek. Until the English went to India the country was swept repeatedly by invasions and conquests. Each newcomer was bent chiefly on plunder, but if he decided to remain he set up a government in which all life and property were his sole and undisputed possession. The only rights the conquered Hindus possessed were those he chose to grant. These consisted principally in providing the conqueror with splendid palaces, jewels, gorgeously caparisoned elephants, dancing girls, a host of swashbuckling retainers and costly tombs. That is why the American tourist in India gets a surfeit of palaces, temples and tombs.

As to the people, they seem to have come to the conclusion pretty far back that it was advisable for them never to display signs of overmuch wealth. The plundering soldier or tax gatherer was always at the door, so apparent poverty was the best shield of defense. Besides, as hasty flight was recurrently necessary before the ravaging armies of Tartar, Afghan and Mogul, gold and jewels were the easiest forms of negotiable security to transport or hide in the earth. In this way Delhi was sacked and sacked again until John Ireland, the New York traveler, visiting that city in the middle of the eighteenth century, thought Nadir Shah must have swept it clean of treasures in his last $200,000,000 raid. Delhi looked to him a poverty stricken place. Yet a century or so afterward, when the British troops stormed it in the mutiny, the Thomas Atkins of those days was pretty soon seen bartering jewels for drinks and playing quoits with gold anklets and bangles.

Since then Delhi has probably accumulated another board of treasure, for the people's yearning in that respect seems to be explained by their never having got over their scare of the invader plundering and squeezing them for ages or the dread terror of a plague taking its toll in millions. Something then unchanging in value to fly with or bury would appear to be their sole idea of security, and without doubt this is best represented in gold and jewels.—New York Tribune.

of the bowels is an absolute necessity for good health. Unless the waste matter from the food which collects there is got rid of at least once a day, it decays and poisons the whole body, causing biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches. Postprandial garrulity reaches its most virulent development among the English speaking peoples. It has become almost a ritualistic and religious function with them, and the resolute Englishman or American goes to his feeding function, his banquet, to eat, drink and be talked at seriously and solemnly.

To gorge a man with dishes and delicacies as a preparation for goading him with deliverance and dullness is the substitute which a modern civilization provides for the Roman holiday, for, though this age abhors blood and slaughter and shudders reminiscently over the memory of gladiators, Numidian lions and Christian martyrs, it does not hesitate to make martyrs of its guests and throw them to its lions, the after dinner spouters. — London Truth.

HUNTING THE HIPPO.

Methods of the Wily Native Hunters of North Africa.

As hippopotamus hunters the Shullas of the Sobat region, North Africa, stand alone. A native hippo hunt is an exciting and dangerous sport. The hunters are in dugout canoes; two or three paddle while one manages the harpoon or barbed spear, to which are attached a stout rope and a float of ambatch.

When the hippo comes to the surface to breathe an attempt is made to steal upon him with the harpoon; when this is accomplished the hunters make a hasty retreat from the enraged beast, and in turn engage his attention while attempts are made to spear him by those in the other canoes.

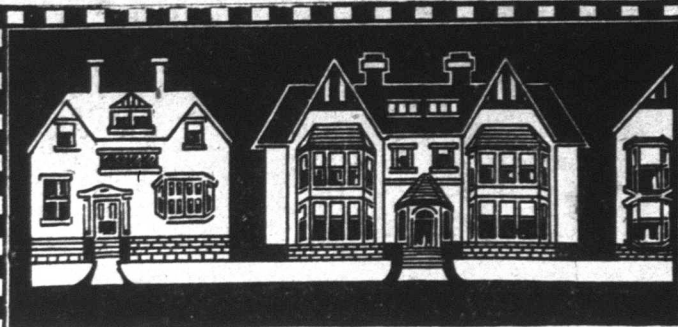

When severely wounded a hippopotamus goes ashore to rest or to die and not to attack its assailants, as has been so often reported. The native hunters wait for this, and when the animal goes up out of the water a volley of spears is thrown into it, and slowly the huge beast bleeds to death. The hunters do not always escape. Sometimes the life or a limb of one of them is sacrificed to their daring.

The hide of the hippopotamus is cut into strips and dried to be sold to Arab traders, who, in turn, sell it to the whipmakers of Omdurman and Egypt. Certain portions of the hide are much prized as shields. The flesh is cut into long, narrow strips and dried in the sun; its taste resembles that of coarse beef.

A King's Dog Lost.

Lord Northcliffe's reference to King Charles' cry for his lost dog as being among the earliest English newspaper advertisements reminds one, says the London Chronicle, of the tone of those pioneer announcements. Here, then, is Charles in search of a dog:

"We must call upon you again for a Black Dog, between a Greyhound and a Spaniel, no white about him, only a streak on his breast and his tail a little bobbed. It is his majesty's own dog, and doubtless was stolen, for the Dog was not born nor bred in England, and would never forsake his Master. Whosoever finds him may acquaint any at Whitehall, for the Dog was better known at Court than those who stole him. Will they never leave robbing his Majesty? Must he not keep a dog? This Dog's place is the only place which nobody offers to buy."

TO CROSS THE SANDS.

Intrepid Russian Countess Courts Danger In Arabian Desert.

A little dare-devil of a woman, a widow hardly turned 30, with the uncounted wealth of a great Russian estate back of her, longs for excitement and proposes to lift the corner of the veil of the unknown world and cross the desert to Arabia, where no white person has trod.

She is Countess Molitor, whose late husband owned big estates near Moscow. Educated in England; speaking seven languages, including Arabic; cultured and rich; much sought in society, she cares naught for those things which usually attract women and seeks only adventure. She has been captured by the natives of South Africa, held prisoner and escaped with her life only because the native women protected her; she has made numerous aeroplane flights; has been held captive by Apaches in Paris, and has been through other perils unnumbered. Yet the young new year will find her en route to Port Said.

The most famous explorers in the world have been laboring with her to persuade her to desist from what they say will be certain death. While planning in London for her perilous trip she donned a nurse's uniform three times a week and presided at a baby clinic. For she is a qualified nurse, having pursued the course in a German hospital a year after her husband's death. She even at one time started to become a missionary, hoping that there would be enough in the life of an evangelist to satisfy her; but the training was too slow; she hungered for more strenuous things.

Henry Savage Ladder and Harry De Windt, two of the most famous explorers in the world, who have been almost everywhere from the tropics to the frozen north, have tried

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

FEATURES OF FIRST WEEK OF LEGISLATURE.

Sir James Whitney sent a letter of thanks through the Legislature to the people of the Province for their good wishes during his illness and their expressions of hope that his recovery would be complete. Mr. Rowell moved that this letter from the Prime Minister be acknowledged and that further assurance be sent to Sir James of the earnest wish of the people of Ontario that he might be entirely well once more.

The speech from the Throne was even more colourless than these documents usually are. Reference was made to the Good Roads Commission and the Workmen's Compensation Bill to be brought before the House.

Mr. Rowell in his reply to the speech from the Throne forecasted special attention to the problem of agriculture and rural life generally in Ontario.

Mr. Rowell called for a thorough investigation of the problem of unemployment which is a serious question this winter in many Provincial centres. He reviewed the steps taken to cope with the difficulty in other countries and chided the Government for not having a Department of Labor instead of scattering various Labor Branches among different Departments as at present.

Mr. J. C. Elliott, Liberal member for West Middlesex, reintroduced his Bill to grant the Municipal Franchise to married women otherwise qualified.

Mr. J. C. Anderson, Liberal member for South Bruce, reintroduced his Bill providing for publicity in campaign contributions.

TEST 3.0 OR 4.8, WHICH?

One of the chief reasons for testing cows not simply once in a while, but at regular intervals, is found in the fact that they are known to vary so greatly and often so inexplicably. Apart altogether from what are termed normal variations from milking to milking, besides the variations between morning and evening, and the variations between the fore milk and the strippings, careful observers have noticed in two days a variation in the test of almost two per cent. of fat in the milk of individual cows, for which no reason can be assigned.

Obviously then it would be quite unfair to judge any cow on any one isolated test when it might be 3.0 one day and 4.8 another day. Which could you take? A fair and just way is to take samples regularly and test a composite sample once a month. Then there will be credit given where it is really due, not necessarily to the one that is supposed to be a high tester, because she is of fancy name or fancy price, but frequently to some tacitly despised individual which is really the queen of the dairy. It will pay to select those cows that are known, not supposed, to yield milk rich in fat.

ONE DEATH EVERY FIVE HOURS

"Consumption" the Cause

Six people die every day in Ontario from Tuberculosis—at the rate of one person every four hours—a total of over 2300 deaths every year—equivalent to the wiping out and loss to the community of a good sized town.

An appalling loss of life. The fact is that this continual sacrifice is necessary. These lives or millions, might be saved.

Pioneer work in the Crusade against Consumption has been done by the National Sanitarium Association. The hospitals at Muskoka and Watkins are to-day standing evidence of magnificent achievements of the Association.

One branch of the Association—a free Illustrated Lecture—seventy-five lantern views—is distributed by Mr. J. B. Watson, Field Lecturer of the Association.

This lecture will be given on Saturday evening, March 1st, at 8 o'clock in the Town Hall, Napanee. On collection will be taken at the aid of the Muskoka Free Hospital Consumptives.

"The amount of information Mr. Watson was able to convey in a short time was marvelous. His style of delivery was excellent."

"Those who heard Mr. Watson's lecture were interested, informed and pleased."

"The wonderful lecturer gave valuable information in a most thoroughly entertaining way."

"Admirably practical and instructive."

"A speaker of unusual ability and a most thrilling lecturer."

Such is the chorus of praise, out any note of dissent, which greeted Mr. Watson's lecture in the past two years.

The lecture explains in a most interesting and complete way exactly what the disease is, how to avoid it and how to treat it.

Parents especially should know how to protect themselves and their children. Every private individual—woman and child—is in danger should know how to combat it.

It is not too much to say that this lecture has been the means of saving many lives. It answers questions everybody is asking. It is simply itself—a child can understand.

To attend such a lecture is a privilege. We heartily commend it to all readers.

time started to become a missionary, hoping that there would be enough in the life of an evangelist to satisfy her; but the training was too slow; she hungered for more strenuous things.

Henry Savage Lauder and Harry De Windt, two of the most famous explorers in the world, who have been almost everywhere from the tropics to the frozen north, have tried in vain to dissuade her. They point to the bleached bones on the Arabian desert. They tell her that even if she could endure the heat and hunger and other discomforts, she will not be able to get past the hostile Arabian sheiks. The first of these nomadic chieftains may receive her cordially, they say, but he will send a runner before her to tell the next sheik to kill her.

"A man couldn't go there," she says, "but I'm a woman. I can wheedle my way; I know how."

It's 650 miles north and south across the great, unexplored sandy waste. Few travelers have even touched the fringe of the great sand plain. There are said to be ancient buried cities in its midst, with the relics of a prehistoric civilization. The countess plans to enlist her caravan at Jedda on the Red Sea, early in the year, while the she camels are giving milk. The real start will be made from Bishah. Fifty miles a day she plans to course the camels until they reach Jalib-el-Takiahk, the last known town before one enters the unexplored waste. She expects to emerge at Muscat on the Gulf of Oman.

If — that big word "if" — she emerges she will be famous; for no white person is known to have crossed the Arabian desert. She expects to be able to tell the world about great cities and lost peoples. If she comes through; she has already planned enough exploration of the unknown parts of Persia and Mongolia to occupy many of the remaining years of her life.

Altered the Case.

"Henry, what is this underworld there is so much talk about?" "The underworld is a general term that is applied to the class which is made up of people who trade on vice and live by criminal practices." "Dear me! Why is such a class permitted to exist?" "Oh, it serves its purpose." "In what way, I should like to know?" "For one thing, if there were no such class I'm afraid I'd have to go out of the law business business right away, and I don't know of anything else that I could make a living at." "Well, of course, that being the case, I suppose we ought to look at it sensibly, but I almost wish you had studied to be a doctor."

Pulled Out His Own Teeth.

An inmate of the lunatic asylum at Chalons, France, had the obsession that his breath smelled so bad that no girl would accept him as a husband. Brooding over this totally imaginary defect, he decided that his teeth must be the cause of it. The wounds healed rapidly, and the poor maniac confessed that the operation had been very painful.

Goldsmith's Actor.

Lord Nugent was one evening very eloquent to Goldsmith in praise of M. (a bad actor). "But, my lord," said Goldsmith, "you must allow he treads the stage very ill—he waddles."

"Waddles?" said Lord Nugent.

"Yes, he waddles like a goose. Why, you know we call him Goose M. Well, and then, you know, when he endeavors to express strong passion he bellows."

"Bellows?" said Lord Nugent.

"To be sure he does—bellows like a bull. Why, we call him Bull M. Well, then," continued Goldsmith, pursuing his triumph, "his voice breaks, and he croaks."

"Croaks?" said Lord Nugent.

"Why, the fellow croaks like a frog. We call him Frog M."

"But M. is a good actor."

"Why, yes," said Goldsmith, "barring the goose and the bull and the frog and a few other things I could mention, and not wishing to speak ill of my neighbors, I will allow M. is a good actor."—"Memoirs of the Earl of Nugent."

Sundials.

A sundial consists of two parts, the style or gnomon, usually the edge of a plate of metal, made parallel to the earth's axis, and pointing toward the pole, and the dial plane, which may be of any hard substance and on which are marked the directions of the shadow for the several hours of the day, their halves, quarters, etc.

Dials are given different names, according to the positions which they are constructed to occupy. The dial is called a horizontal dial when the dial plane is on the plane of the horizon; a vertical dial when perpendicular to that plane. A dial whose plane is parallel to the equator is called an equinoctial dial. There are also north dials, south dials, east dials, west dials, polar dials, declining dials, etc.—Chicago Tribune.

DEATH EVERY FOUR HOURS

sumption" the Cause.

People die every day in Ontario tuberculosis—at the rate of one every four hours—a total of 40 deaths every year—equivalent wiping out and loss to the city of a good sized town. The appalling loss of life. The pity his continual sacrifice is unnecessary. These lives or most of might be saved. The work in the Crusade against consumption has been done by the Sanitarium Association. The pitiful at Muskoka and Weston are standing evidence of magnificent achievements of the Association. The work of the Association work is illustrated Lecture with five lantern views—is delivered by J. B. Watson, Field Secretary. The lecture will be given on Sunday, March 1st, at 8 o'clock, in the Town Hall, Napanee, Ont. A number will be taken at the close in the Muskoka Free Hospital for patients. The amount of information which Watson was able to convey to his in a short time was marvelous. The delivery was excellent. The audience who heard Mr. Watson were interested, informed and satisfied. The wonderful lecturer gave most of the information in a manner thoroughly entertaining. The lecture was practically and instructive. The speaker of unusual ability. The most thrilling lecturer. The chorus of praise, with a note of dissent, which has been Mr. Watson's lecture during the last two years. The lecture explains in a simple, interesting and complete way exactly what disease is, how to avoid it, and how to treat it. The audience especially should know how to take care of themselves and their children—private individual—man, woman and child—is in danger and how to combat it. The audience too much to say that this has been the means of saving lives. It answers questions which are asking. It is simplicity itself which can understand. The audience such a lecture is a privilege. The audience heartily commend it to our friends.

GETTING ON THE STAGE.

Dangers That Beset New Eggs in the Vaudeville Basket.

The most amazing thing to a theatrical manager is the utter lack of comprehension on the part of applicants of what professional work really means.

When I was writing vaudeville sketches I used to get letters from young fellows in country towns who wanted to go into vaudeville. For some unaccountable reason they figured out that that was the easiest way to break into the entertainment business. As a matter of fact, they were choosing the very toughest end of it all. In vaudeville there is no stage manager to tell one what to do and how to do it. He must rely entirely upon himself. Furthermore, he must do his own booking, get his own transfer agent to take care of his baggage, negotiate his own railroading and even pack his own properties. In fact, he has a thousand and one troubles to divert his mind from his proper business. It never seems to dawn upon the aspirant that it's much better to get into a great organization, where there's somebody to attend to every problem for him and where he has a chance to learn the details of stagecraft.

A clever vaudeville man, to begin with, must have a good act, and if he be unknown he must know how to talk his act to the managers. If he employs an agent he is at a disadvantage, because these persons work for the management of the theaters. Furthermore, the vaudeville man must remember that he comes out on to the stage with nothing behind him, practically no properties, no chorus girls to divert attention. The eyes of the people are centered on him. He must do it all. It is by far the most difficult business in the world to succeed at, unless one is very talented.—George M. Cohan, in the New York Sun.

SCARED THE LION.

Bravery and Daring Displayed by an African Woman.

In "Hunting the Elephant in Africa" the author, Captain C. H. Stigand, in telling some lion stories, admits that there is a certain thrill in connection with the king of the jungle. The Somalis say that a lion makes you jump three times—first, when you hear him roar; secondly, when you unexpectedly meet his spoor, and thirdly, when you first sight him. They say that even a bold man is thus frightened three times by a lion, but after the sudden shock of seeing him is over he is no longer afraid. And in this connection he tells us a good story of female heroism:

"At a village near Fort Mangoche, also in Nyasaland, a man was sitting one night at the door of his hut drumming while his wife was cooking food inside. The hut was an isolated one, being several hundred yards from the rest of the village.

"Suddenly the woman heard the man call out, 'A lion has got me.' She took a burning fagot from the fire, ran out and smacked the lion in the face. The astonished animal let go, and she dragged her husband into the hut and hastily put up the poles which form the door. The man died a few minutes after, and the woman sat there with the dead body.

"Presently the lion returned and

DIVINE JUDGMENTS ARE ALL BLESSINGS

God's Gracious Provision for the World of Mankind.

Eternal Torment Wholly Foreign to the Divine Character — God's Judgments Are "Righteous Altogether" — Death the Divine Judgment Against the Race of Adam—God's Special Judgments.

Feb. 22.—Pastor Russell's text for to-day was, "When Thy judgments are broad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isaiah 26:9.

In beginning, the Pastor stated that only those who reach an advanced degree of knowledge of God's Word can realize that Divine judgments are all good. Under the influence of superstition, not understanding the Scriptures aright, supposing that they teach eternal torment for the majority of the race, we feared God rather than loved Him. We dared not say that such a judgment on God's part was wrong, malicious, devilish; yet we were unable to see it in any other light. Many intelligent minds dislike to think about God and His supposedly terrible purposes respecting humanity—all the result of a misunderstanding of the teachings of the Bible.

The Pastor demonstrated that the torment doctrines of the Dark Ages are wholly out of accord with the Divine character, which is distinctly marked by Wisdom, Justice, Mercy and Love toward all. He showed that instead of a judgment of eternal torment against the race, the penalty for sin is death; that the verdict, or judgment, is righteous; that God had a perfect right to destroy in death the creature who refused to render the obedience which he was able to give, being perfect.

Another part of the Divine Judgment against humanity is that the death process is gradual. Thus the race is the better enabled to learn the lesson of the "exceeding sinfulness of sin," to the intent that, when granted the new trial secured by the merit of Christ's sacrifice, mankind may profit by it the more.

The Pastor further explained that all the race will have opportunity of coming to a full knowledge of the Truth during the Millennial Reign of Christ, which is God's provision for the world in general. What God did for Natural Israel during the Jewish Age and for Spiritual Israel during this Gospel Age are matters apart from His dealings with mankind. From these two Israels overcomers have been chosen, or elected. The overcomers of Spiritual Israel will constitute the Kingdom class in the highest sense. The overcomers of Natural Israel will constitute the earthly phase of the Kingdom. Mankind will see these, but not the glorified Christ—Head and Body—the King of Glory.

"Presently the lion returned and scratched gently on the door. This he repeated several times till it got on the woman's nerves. At last she could stand it no longer, so she took another fagot from the fire, unbarred the door and fled to the village, leaving the dead man. The lion then walked into the hut and took him."

How We Got the Gas Jet.

Possibly very few people know that we owe the ordinary gas jet to the accidental use of a woman's thimble. After the dinner of the British Commercial Gas association Professor Vivian Leves told how Clegg, of Redruth used to burn the illuminant straight from the open pipe and turn it off by plugging the pipe with some clay. Upon one occasion his lump of clay was missing, and, picking up his wife's thimble, he put this on top of the pipe. Much to his surprise, the gas escaped through small holes which had been worn by the constant use of the needle, small burning jets of gas resulting. From this Professor Leves traced the evolution of the gas jet.—London Globe.

Surf Birds.

That birds of the family termed surf birds in the Hawaiian Islands should leave that paradise of the Pacific to go and rear their young in the tundras of Alaska would seem to many an extraordinary proceeding, yet the turnstone and the black bellied plover and the Pacific golden plover make the long journey of about 4,000 miles thither annually.

"No, confound it," replied her husband, "I put in the quarter!"—Magazine of Fun.

French Miners on Strike.

PARIS, Feb. 24.—Despatches from the coal mining districts report that a number of miners at St. Etienne ceased work yesterday and that others have announced their intention of following suit in the course of the week. How Frozen Insects Revive.

Experiments in reviving frozen insects by a naturalist show some surprising results. A large cecropia moth, frozen in the centre of a snowball until it was perfectly brittle, revived in twenty seconds when held near a stove. Several newly hatched moths revived in a similar manner after being frozen stiff and then thawed out. Similar experiments with ants, butterflies and houseflies gave the same results. But the naturalist noticed that recently hatched insects resist cold better than older ones.

The overcomers of Spiritual Israel will constitute the Kingdom class in the highest sense. The overcomers of Natural Israel will constitute the earthly phase of the Kingdom. Mankind will see these, but not the glorified Christ—Head and Body—the King of Glory.

God Will Judge His People.

The world, the Pastor declared, has been under one general sentence of Divine Justice, "Dying, thou shalt die." But Natural and Spiritual Israel have been dealt with as freed from the original sentence and on trial afresh for life or death under God's judgments, or disciplines. Not all under these judgments have understood them—not all were in condition of heart to receive them.

During the Jewish Age, Israel often lapsed into more or less darkness and idolatry, and failed to see their special privileges and relationship to God under their Covenant. A few, however, discerned with the eye of faith the righteousness of God's dealings. Among these were the Prophets, who declared that the Divine judgments were merciful in the extreme.

Similarly during this Gospel Age Christendom as a whole has not been able to appreciate Divine judgments. But some have been "Israelites indeed," who have been able to rejoice in His judgments, and by faith to realize God's love for them.

God's Judgments In the World.

Then the Pastor quoted numerous Scriptures showing that during the next Age God's judgments will be abroad in the earth, and will include every member of Adam's race. These will be administered by The Christ, of which our glorified Lord is the Head, and the Church the Body, when glorified also. These judgments will not mean havoc and dismay, but relief and assistance to all who come into line with the righteous arrangements of the Kingdom. The judgments of that thousand-year Day will be severe. The wilfully rebellious will be destroyed, but not until they shall have been brought to a clear appreciation of good and evil and of their penalties, life and death.

The Pastor declared that there will be no failure respecting God's Oathbound Covenant made with Abraham—"In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The basis of blessing will be Christ's redemptive work, finished at Calvary. The outworking of that blessing will come through the glorified Lord and the Church. The first work will be the establishment of a righteous Government, in which justice will be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet. This will mean increasing harmony with the Lord, character development and of restititional blessings.

Nails, Eggs, Tobacco and Codfish as Mediums of Exchange.

A curious medium of exchange in Scotland not many years ago was handmade nails. This is equaled by Switzerland, where eggs are still current coin. Eggs would be rather risky coin to deposit in the bank for several reasons, but not so wheat and oats, which have been used for all purposes of sale and purchase in Norway and have even been banked. The national corn crop of Mexico is maize and not very long ago formed the chief money of that republic.

In the time of our ancestors tobacco was used almost exclusively in Virginia instead of gold and silver. In Newfoundland dried codfish was at one time a great medium of exchange. It had the advantage of keeping indefinitely, and it is said that the Newfoundland miser got as much pleasure from the odor of his possession as though it were from Araby.

In savage lands they used more curious things as money. Salt circulated in Abyssinia; cubes of beeswax were the medium in Sumatra, cubes of tea were used in Tartary; in some of the Portuguese possessions the coin consists of straw mats. In the islands of the Pacific they depend upon feathers, while in Madagascar the natives count their wealth in iron shovels. China has had varied forms of currency, not the least curious being the coins made of clay, while Japan used the slightly more expensive substance resin.—New York Sun.

VELOCITY OF LIGHT.

Roemer's Early Calculations Have Stood the Test of Time.

The first astronomer to demonstrate satisfactorily the speed of light was Ole Roemer, a Scandinavian scientist, who read his immortal paper on this subject before the Academy at Paris July 22, 1675. Roemer's calculations and conclusions have stood the test of time and subsequent investigations on all important points.

Knowledge as to the velocity of light was of tremendous importance to astronomical science, since it enabled astronomers to estimate accurately the enormous distances with which their science deals. Roemer found that light traveled at the rate of 186,000 miles in a second. The sun, being distant from the earth 92,000,000 miles, flashes light to us in eight minutes and fourteen seconds.

Yet the sun is a near neighbor compared with the so called fixed stars, which in reality move with inconceivable velocity, although the most powerful telescopes will not show that velocity as anything but rest. Beyond the outskirts of our insignificant solar system are other systems, and beyond them still others, so far as the sight of man, aided by instruments, may bridge the ghastly chasm of the infinite.

Distances beside which the immense one stretching from earth to sun is an invisible point are now measured by means of Roemer's special discovery as to the velocity of light.—Exchange.

SWEPT INTO AN ICE FU

Perilous Experience of an E
Who Was Imprisoned a Whole
In a Treacherous Crevasse in cier on the Brink of a Gaping

Some thrilling experiences of fell Frederick Chamberlin who was exploring the Alps. In the World Magazine he writes of venture that befell him on the noon of a September day when descending the snow slope of a tain:

"Suddenly I found myself in a particularly nasty serac, or ice that gave very little foothold surface was not broken and cr but just smooth, treacherous ice. ever, I was not going to be daunt I wormed my way up and was to descend the other side without warning my feet shot from me, and I started careering down slope at break neck speed.

"Down I slid, straight through nel shaped hole into a partly crevasse. I brought up sharply a small bar of ice that only ju vented me from continuing my long career into a gaping chasm.

"For a few seconds I lay halted; then I carefully got on my felt my body all over to see if bones had been broken and round for my ice ax, but that had appeared.

"I saw a slight crack in the side of one of the sides, and I tried to myself up, but my fingers could get a firm hold in the slippery ice. I was soon forced to give up. Then I tried lying flat on my back the funnel through which I had entered my prison and, firmly planting my knees against its sloping side, endeavored to work myself back. too, I failed.

"Being by this time quite desperate I took out my little pocket knife to cut steps in the slope. My stiff fingers let the knife slip at the attempt, and, although I groped for a long time, I failed to recover it.

"My last chance had gone with the knife. The darkness creeping over enveloping everything, the delirious, the bitter cold, were all nning to take effect, and I groaned the prospect of the long night in of me. I dared not lean too far for that slender bar of ice might way. I called out loudly at intervals but the sound was stifled by the hanging walls.

"Soon it was pitch dark, and to away the time and keep my spirit I loudly sang a popular American. But soon my thoughts became gloomy again. There was no sound but a drip, drip, down below, and some the grinding, tearing, booming of a whole serac would set my quivering. I shivered incessantly. I was wet through from contact with the ice, and the night seemed interminable.

The Stone of infamy.

In many Italian cities there formerly existed what was called "pietra d'in-famie," or a stone of infamy for the punishment of bankrupts. In Venice
one stands near the Church of St.
Mark, and in Verona and Florence they are near the old markets. On a day in carnival week the old time custom was to have all traders who had become bankrupt in the preceding twelve months led to the stone, and one by one each stood on its center to bear the reading of a report of his business failure and to endure the re-proaches heaped on him by his creditors. At the end of a certain time each bankrupt was partly undressed, and three officers took hold of his shoulders and three others of his knees and, raising him as high as they could, bumped him on the stone deliberately twelve times "in honor of the twelve apostles," the creditors crowding like cocks while the bumping proceeded.

In the smoking room of an eastbound Pullman, the other evening,
there were two men—one of them grouchy, the other one receptive. After smoking two indifferent cigars the latter said to the former:

"How far are you going?"

"Buffalo," acknowledged the other one, taken off his guard.

"Is that so? Well, Buffalo is a great town. I have a cousin living there, and I've been there myself several times. The last time was twelve years ago and over. Er—what are you going to do in Buffalo?"

"Change cars." — Cleveland Plain

A Witty Reply.

A witty but not over-industrious Celt was one of a street gang. A few minutes before noon one day he threw his shovel into the gutter, sat down on the curbstone and proceeded to light his pipe. Just then the superintendent of streets came round a corner and, seeing Pat, roared out:
"Here! What are you throwing down your shovel for at this time of day?"

"To cool it, sorr," said Pat.—Lon-

"Giving Quarter."

The phrase, "Giving quarter," originated in an understanding between the Dutch and the Spaniards that the ransom of an officer should be one-quarter of his pay. Hence, to beg quarter was to offer a quarter of their pay for their ransom, and to refuse quarter was to decline the money as a ransom.

ARMY DEMORALIZED.

Terrors of Rampant Militarism Are Seen In Russia.

The conditions of service in the Russian army are unbearable, according to the correspondent of a London periodical that treats exclusively of Russian affairs. This correspondent declares that the spy system and utter lack of consideration for enlisted men by the officers, and their brutality in dealing with civilians have crippled Russia's fighting force and reduced to a low ebb the spirit of the army. The article says:

"All military writers agree that at least half the strength of any army depends upon the spirit prevailing in its ranks. If they are to fight well and successfully the men must be united by comradeship, have faith in their officers and feel that they are risking their lives for something worth fighting for.

"Looking at the Russian army from this point of view, we cannot but be startled by the facts of every day life among the Czar's soldiers. Comradeship is practically made impossible by espionage.

"It must not be imagined that spies confine their attention to privates. The officers are not immune from the same treatment. Until recently political charges made by the secret police against officers of the army had to be inquired into and verified by the Ministry of War. But the gendarmes naturally disliked this procedure, as it often exposed the worthlessness of espionage. The chief of the secret police therefore applied to Gen. Sukhomlinoff, the Minister of War, asking that any information about any army officer coming from his agents should be accepted by the military authorities without question. M. Sukhomlinoff fully agreed to this suggestion, gave orders accordingly, and added that the police reports should be kept secret from the officers concerned. Thus every officer is now at the mercy of every turncoat and spy without being given a chance to refute the allegations against him.

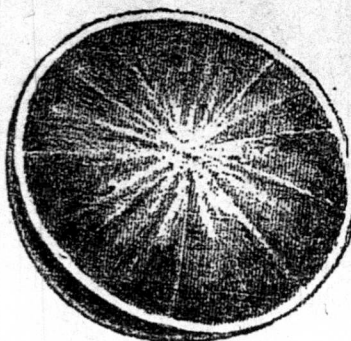

"Duelling is encouraged and sometimes forced. An arrogant attitude toward peaceful citizens, especially if they are independent in their political opinions, is interpreted as a laudable manifestation of 'military honor' and loyalty, while heartless, cruel treatment of the rank and file is regarded as 'good discipline.'

"A writer named Kulchitsky has published a volume entitled 'Advice to Young Officers.' In this book, which deals, among other things, with possible quarrels between officers and civilians, the author says: 'Kill on the spot and with a single blow. A living man may harm you, while a dead one is harmless (i.e., as a witness) in case of a trial.' This book is recommended by commanders to their young officers on leaving a certain military school.

"This encouragement of lawlessness certainly does not strengthen the necessary discipline in the Russian army. While exacting from the private absolute obedience to a superior's order, however idiotic or lawless, and absolute conformity to formal rules which have nothing to do with the military efficiency of the soldier, the bullying officer no longer acknowledges any binding discipline so far as he himself is concerned."

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

In that secret and secluded shelter I thought that we were safe for the time being. Especially was I sure that they would make no effort to find us at night, as the place had anciently been some sort of a shrine. And in the morning I did not think that they would chance upon that particular cave out of the many in the coral walls without a long search, unless they had proposed coming just there for other reasons than we gave them. Even if they did stumble upon our hiding place early in the hunt, which I felt sure would be made for us as soon as they discovered evidences of our presence on the island in the shape of the dinghy, or at least at day-break, it would take them some time to rebuild the rock wall again; and when they did enter the outer room they would find it a matter of extreme difficulty to get into the inner chamber so long as I was there. Unfortunately we had brought no powder or ball with us. We had no means of reloading our firearms, once they had been discharged. I resolved to reserve the four pistols we had for the last emergency. For other weapons I had my ax and sword, to say nothing of stones and even of the human skulls about the altar.

I have said, I think, that the inner cave was slightly damp. The dampness arose from a spring of water which bubbled away in some dark corner which we had not cared to explore. We had what provisions we had brought with us left over from our luncheon, which I had luckily preserved instead of throwing it away, and an armful of coconuts and other fruit. These, however, would last us but a short while. If they couldn't come at us by force they could easily sat close together and talked in low whispers, and I thrilled at the contact of her sweet presence in spite of our peril.

How long we talked or how long we waited I have no means of telling. It grew dark in the cave very early, and when I ventured into the outside room after what seemed an interminable wait, I found night had fallen. I felt pretty sure that we need apprehend no attack that night, and yet it was necessary to keep watch, so I proposed that one of us should sleep while the other listened. Naturally she was the first to take rest. It was too damp and cold to lie down on the sand, so I wedged myself against one of the least rotted of the chests, whose shape had been kept intact by the pile of gold and silver bars, and somewhat hesitatingly offered her the shelter of my arms.

"Madam," I said, with all the formality I could muster, "you must have sleep. You cannot lie upon this damp sand, and it is bad enough to sit upon it, but upon my shoulder and within the support of my arms you shall have rest. I swear to you!"

"Swear not," she replied, coming closer to me. "I trust you, and if I am to sleep I know that I will be safe within your arms."

"As my sister, had I one, or as my mother, were she here, will I support you," said I.

Before she closed her eyes she made her evening prayer for herself and for me, and then she made me promise that I would awaken her when I judged it to be midnight, and, upon my promise, without more to do she nestled down and went to sleep, her head upon my shoulder.

Surely, never had man a greater com-

Indeed, I have never got used to it even after all these years. As I look back at it now I do not think I have ever had happier moments in my life than those in which she clung to me and was dependent upon me.

"Why not?" she asked.

"You forget that we broke down the way last night."

"But you are a sailor; you might make shift."

"Yes; but not you," I answered.

"Without me?"

"Without you I go nowhere."

She looked at me with shining eyes.

"Come," said I, "let us go into the outer room. We may find out something."

I had wound my watch in the dark and looked at it now as we came into the light. It was three bells in the morning watch, or about half after 9. We went past the altar with its grim, bony circle of attendants and stared through the entrance. There was an open space in front of the cliff forty or fifty yards wide perhaps. After looking some time and seeing nothing I foolishly—and yet it would have made no difference in the end—stepped out upon the shelf which made a sort of platform in front of the cave, and Mistress Lucy fearlessly came with me.

We had scarcely appeared in view when to our astounded surprise we head the report of a firearm and a heavy bullet struck the coral wall just over our heads. I had just time to mark the spot whence it came by the betraying smoke as I leaped back into the shelter, carrying my precious charge before me. I was puzzled beyond measure. I was certain that the savages in these parts of the south seas knew nothing about firearms, and I could not account for it. The shower of arrows and spears that came through the opening and fell harmlessly on the sand I could easily account for, but not that shot.

"That," said I solemnly, "was a narrow escape."

"Do these islanders have firearms?" she said, the same thought in her mind. "I never heard of it. I cannot account for it."

"I can, though," she said. "Just before the discharge of that gun I caught the sight of a man in clothes such as you wear. Could it be possible that it was some one from the ship?"

I nodded my head.

"It is quite likely," I answered.

At this moment conversation was interrupted by a hail. I heard in that lonely island my own name called.

"Master Hampdon," the cry came to us, "will you respect a flag of truce? If so show yourself at the opening, and I shall do the same."

"Don't go," cried my little mistress, hearing all; "they are utterly without honor and!"

"I think it will be best for me to go," I said. "Stand clear so that if any treacherous movement be made I shall have space to leap backward, and meanwhile look to your weapons."

I examined my pistols and then calling out that I would faithfully observe the flag of truce I stepped out into the open. There below me on the edge of the glade, convenient to a tree behind which he could leap, for the rascal following and we will all together on the Rose of Devon.

"What of the ship?" I asked.

It was a hard thing to temper, but I wanted the information. "She was badly stove up by a tireless wrecked. We fought ages, conquered them, made friends. We can get away if you can navigate her or without you for that matter. I shift to get back to the Southerly coast at least."

"So you offer me free passage of the treasure if I up Mistress Wilberforce, do you?"

"That is it," answered I. "I'm mates?" whereat a deep cheer of approval came from Glibby and

"And this is my answer, furiously, leveling my pistol. 'Get back, you villain, or you looked your last on life.'"

"But the flag of truce?" dropping his weapon.

"It is not meant to cover situations as yours. As for the you shall have it when you come."

"The next move," I answered with them.

"No," I replied. "We will for the present."

We were not long left in for I could hear them break in the woods and rushing to opening. ner which we had not cared to explore. We had what provisions we had brought with us left over from our luncheon, which I had luckily preserved instead of throwing it away, and an armful of coconuts and other fruit. These, however, would last us but a short while. If they couldn't come at us by force they could easily starve us out. Also they could, without too much trouble or danger, make themselves masters of the outer cave. Indeed, I scarcely thought it would be wise for me to attempt to prevent that, and in that case they could wall up the entrance and leave us there.

CHAPTER XV.

Wherein We Are Beleaguered In the Cave.

IT did not occur to us for a single moment that the savages had any knowledge of the treasure and that they could be after that. Not for the thousandth part of a second did I dream that the savages were led by Pimball, Glibby and most of the other seamen of the Rose of Devon. I did not know then that the Rose of Devon had gone ashore in the terrific storm I have described, or that there had been a battle with the savages, who sought to plunder the ship, but were prevented at frightful loss to the islanders, who were unable to contend successfully against the firearms with which the ship was abundantly provided. A means of communication between the ship and the shore had been found subsequently through one of the seamen who had sailed the south seas. The savages had been told of the treasure, of which indeed they had some dim traditions from days gone by; they also held the cave as one of their most sacred spots, scarcely less sacred than the great altar on the hillock in the center of the island, for what reason I cannot tell. Some of this I learned afterward from our assailants, and much of it I divined on reflection on our voyage homeward.

By some persuasion, I know not what, Pimball and Glibby had won them over. Together they had organized an expedition to come and seize us and take the treasure. The Rose of Devon I guessed was not badly damaged and could easily be made seaworthy.

We sat silent in the cave for a long time. I had not lighted the lantern we had left there at our last visit, and some of the light of the dying day filtered through from the outside cave. There was nothing that we needed fight for. We sat close together on the remains of one of the chests to protect us from the damp sand. I always carried with me a flask of spirits. Not that I am a drinking man; I left and still leave that practice to the gallants of the day, but I have often found it useful in some dire emergency, and as Mistress Lucy shivered in the chill, damp air I heartened her and strengthened her with a dram.

As it was summer and not far from the line, I had not brought the boat cloak with us. I had not even worn my sailor jacket, but my waistcoat was heavy and warm, and I was thankful that I had it. I took it off and, despite her protestations, slipped it on her. In girth it was big enough to encircle her twice, which was all the better for her comfort. I drew it around to cover her breast with a double fold, and with a length of line I had in my pocket I made it fast. We

Before she closed her eyes she made her evening prayer for herself and for me, and then she made me promise that I would awaken her when I judged it to be midnight, and, upon my promise, without more to do she nestled down and went to sleep, her head upon my shoulder.

Surely, never had man a greater compliment paid him than I by that maid that night!

I sat there motionless, my bared sword at my side, listening. I could hear nothing, no sound except her soft breathing and once in awhile the sough of the night wind through the trees outside, which penetrated faintly into the cave, and at infrequent intervals the cry of some night bird came to me, but there was no sound of humanity.

How long we sat there I know not. It was my purpose to keep awake the night through, and I think I must have kept awake the greater part thereof, but toward morning my head dropped back on the pile of ingots, and I fell asleep. Yet I did not relax my clasp upon the sleeping figure lying upon my breast. It was she who awakened when the dim light began to sift through the narrow opening into the little cave where we sat.

"Master Hampdon," she said, bending over me, having arisen without disturbing me, "it is morning."

I sprang to my feet instantly, as she shook me gently and grasped my sword as I did so, whereat she laughed.

"Why did you not awaken me?" she asked reprovingly.

"I don't know. I must have"--I began in great confusion.

"You must have gone to sleep yourself," she laughed.

"I am ashamed," I replied, "that I should have failed in my duty to keep good watch. I didn't awake you when I might because you needed sleep yourself, and then, like a big animal, I went to sleep myself."

"I am glad," she said, smiling at me, and I could just see her lovely face faintly in the dark twilight of the cave, "that you did and nothing happened."

"It is just as well then," I said, smiling in turn, "we have both slept. I feel greatly refreshed."

"And I."

"Thank God," I said fervently.

"What is to be done now?" she asked.

"First, breakfast."

I broke open a coconut with my ax. I had become expert at it, and we had food and drink in plenty and for variety some of the hard bread which still remained which I had brought with us and other fruit. I lighted the lantern for a moment and went toward the sound of the falling water. The coconut shell made an excellent cup, and I brought her enough clear, cool, sweet water to lave her face and hands. Save for the stiffness of the constrained position and some slight pain caused by the damp we were both fit for any adventure.

Well, we should have need of our strength. When we finished our meal and our refreshing ablutions, she looked at me inquiringly.

"Well, what next?"

"The next thing," said I, "is to see what is toward."

"You won't leave the cave," she said, catching me by the shoulder.

"I should find it difficult were I so minded," I answered, smiling and thrilling to her touch again, as always.

"Say what you have to say and be quick about it," I said, but he looked past me and took off his hat with a profound sweep.

"Good morning, Mistress Wilberforce," he cried.

I turned in a hurry and found that she had stepped out by my side. The two of us presented a fair mark for any weapon. One might have escaped, but hardly two.

"Get back," I cried harshly.

"I stay where you are," she answered firmly. "See, I too am armed." Her little hand lifted a heavy pistol.

"I can talk with the two of you just as well as with one," said Pimball.

"Talk on and be brief," I returned, seeing that there was no use arguing with my little mistress.

"You have found the treasure," he began; "there is no use denying it. We have it from our savage friends that the things are there. In years gone by they sacrificed here and on the cone yonder; but for generations the island has been taboo. The white man has broken the ban and we are here to take the treasure."

"Indeed!" said I sarcastically, whereat he turned pale with anger but still mastered himself.

"We offer you," he continued, "safety. We cannot take you with us, but we will leave you here on the island after we have taken the treasure, and," his eyes turned from me to my companion, "if you are willing to give up the woman I will enroll you with our

WE had withdrawn by the to the back of the cave. Indeed, that w only safe place for us constant succession of weapon thrown through the opening. We ed no further warning to keep reach. Master Pimball was sl himself something of a genera was keeping us away from t trance, and with the great host (at his command he was buildi the broken down heap of stones would presently enable them to to us.

Perhaps the latter would t safer plan, but I had a strange i gness to adopt it. It would l burying ourselves, for once wit should never get out alive, ex prisoners, so long as they had t er cave. I could face a thousand savages, a hundred Pinbolls, without a quiver of the nerves, but at these words and that proffer my knees fairly smote together before this small woman. I stood staring down at her.

"You were overeager once to take from me what I now offer you willingly," she said, half turning away.

With that I caught her to me and once again I drank the sweetness of her lips. I forgot the savages outside, the spears, the arrows streaming through the entrance. I held her in my arms and without resistance. I could have held her there forever, quite willing to die in such sweet embrace.
She pushed me from her at last and I could swear that my kisses had been returned, and then with a whispered blessing she dropped to her knees and crawled within the cave.

I could have fought the world thereafter, for her kisses intoxicated me like wine. Yet even then I did not de-lude myself. I knew that, on her part at least, it was a farewell kiss, such as two friends might give each other in the face of death. To her the pressure of my lips had only been as the salute of an ancient gladiator about to die was to the Caesar who watched the struggle. Well, I blessed her even for that condescension.

With a pistol in each hand and the third upon a rock close at hand I waited. I had not long to wait. There was a sudden fiercer rain of arrows and spears, some of which struck at my feet or by my side. I gathered up a sheaf of them and laid them with the pistol on the rock.

The next instant two tremendous savages and a white man appeared in the opening. The shot was easy, the target fine. I couldn't miss. The first bullet went into the brain of Master Glibby, the next tore off the head of the leading chief. Reserving the third pistol, I seized a spear and drove it through the throat of the other savage.
I shouted with triumph, and Mistress Lucy has since confessed to me that, kneeling down and peering through the opening, contrary to my explicit order,
which was for her to seek safe cover,
she saw all, and that my call of victory was the sweetest sound she had ever heard in her life.

I thought we had done, but they were an indomitable lot those south sea islanders, and they were well urged. Four others took their places at once, spears in hand, which they threw at me. I jumped aside with difficulty and let fly the third pistol. They came crowding this time, and the bullet from the heavy weapon accounted for two others, but the survivors had gained a footing and the shelf behind them was suddenly filled with lifting heads and climbing men. I clubbed my weapons and hurled them one after another fair and square into the mass.
One went down with a broken skull.
The rush was checked; they gave a little. I cast spears at them and arrows, but now the shield men had come up, and they caught the missiles on their shields. The front rank wavered, and perhaps, if they had been unsupported, they might have been driven below, but the crowd behind would not let them. Slowly they began to move toward me.

I doubt not I was a terrible figure,
for I had whipped out my cutlass by this time and stood at bay. I had forgotten for the moment all else but the lust of the conflict, and in another second I had three myself upon them to

I doubt not I was a terrible figure, for I had whipped out my cutlass by this time and stood at bay. I had forgotten for the moment all else but the lust of the conflict, and in another second I had flung myself upon them in fury. It was my mistress who recalled me to myself.

"Save yourself!" she shrieked. "They are upon you. Come hither!"

With that I dropped to my knees and made a spring for the opening. I had waited too long. The leading man would have pinned me to the earth with his spear. The entrance was wide, fortunately, and Mistress Lucy could see through the part I did not block with my huge bulk. Disregarding entirely my instructions, she fired the last pistol at the nearest man. He went down like a ninepin, both legs broken, which gave me time to gain the inner chamber and stand upright. I was bleeding, for I had been cut here and there, but was otherwise all right.

"That shot saved my life!" I cried, panting. "You should have kept it for yourself."

"I can find means to die," she answered. "If naught else, by your sword blade."

"Good," I exclaimed, proud of her prowess and her resolution.

They gave us no time for further speech, for, urged by what promises of reward, what passionate hatred, I knew not, they came on. The narrow entrance was suddenly black with the islanders, who thrust their spears at us. Fortunately, my mistress had moved aside and was out of range, but I was perilously near being cut down. Mistress Lucy had the sword which I had thrust into her hand, and I the great ax which I had cast into the inner cave ahead of me.

Those outside were even less able to see than we, and perhaps they thought we had withdrawn or been driven back, for they crept forward. While I had lived in the gardener's lodge of Wilberforce castle I had got to be quite an axman. I brought down the heavy weapon on the first head, striking with just enough force to kill the man and yet leave me able to recover myself without delay, and when three heads had been knocked that way in rapid succession with no more damage to me than a trifling spear cut on the ankle, the battle stoppel for a moment. I laughed.

"Come on, you dogs!" I shouted. "I can play at that game until you are more tired of it than I."

I spoke without thought, however, for those outside the opening drew back the bodies by their legs and thus cleared the entrance. I judged that the outer cave, which was large and spacious, was now filled with men. They were shouting and gesticulating in great excitement. But none made any effort to enter. Finally I heard a human voice speaking English. It was Pimball.

"Master Hampdon!" he cried. "Speak not to me, you murdering villain!" I answered.

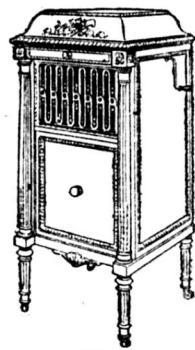

"Now, this is madness," he went on. "You are trapped like rats. We have only to wall up the entrance or build a fire in front of it and you will die."

"It is better to die even so," I replied, "than to live with men like you."

"You are a fool!" he exclaimed.

She Fired the Last Pistol at the Nearest Man.

He dropped down on his knees as he spoke, and I could see his face in the opening, but too far away for me to swing my ax. If it were my last effort I was determined that I would get him, and so I waited.

"Don't lose the sword!" I cried to my lady across the chamber, where her white face stared at me out of the dimness.

"I shall not," she answered undauntedly.

Then I lifted the ax and waited for Master Pimball and his men to come on. But he had a better plan. Bullets and powder they had in plenty, and he knew from the fact that I had thrown my pistols at them that I had none left. With a deafening rear a storm of bullets from a dozen weapons swept into the cave. I leaped back. I had to or I should have been shot where I stood. Of the way thus opened they took advantage, and under cover of a second volley they entered. Well, it was all up. All I could do was to leap upon them as they rose, and—

But at that moment the solid rock beneath my feet began to sway. It was as if I had been instantly translated to the deck of a tossing ship. I stood rooted to the spot trying to maintain a balance. Pimball had lifted himself upon one knee and was almost clear of the entrance, but he, too, stopped appalled. A sickening feeling of apprehension that all the savages on earth could not inspire came over me. My mistress screamed faintly. The natives outside broke into terror stricken shouts and cries; on oath burst from the lips of the leader of the mutineers.

The next moment, with a crash like a thousand thunder peals, the earth was rent in twain.

The earthquake shook that rocky island like a baby's cradle. A great mass of rock over the entrance fell. With another roar like the first the cliff was riven in every direction. The noise outside eased. The men with Pimball were ground to death. Upon his legs lay fifty feet of broken rock. Darkness, total and absolute, succeeded the dim light. I remember realizing that the attack had failed and then something struck me. Down upon the wet, still quivering sand I fell and knew no more.

Water, icy cold, trickling upon me from some spring, opened in the wall by the earthquake presently brought me to myself. I lay for a moment listening. I could hear nothing at first, but in a little while a deep groan and then a faint whispered prayer came to me.

I strove desperately to collect my senses, and finally I realized where I was—the cave, the battle, the earthquake, Pimball and the woman!

"Mistress Lucy!" I cried.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

THE actual money making on a farm comes when we are above the average in quality and production.

Those who stand on the common level will get a living, but not much more. Farming needs individuality of character and purpose just as running a store or a factory does.

If the usual profit in a flock of hens is $1 each above the cost of food the aim should be to increase egg production and the sale of broilers or other kinds of fancy poultry so that there will be a profit of $2 for each hen kept. This is to be accomplished by selecting pullets from the best laying mothers and by breeding up with full blooded males.

If the cows in a dairy herd are paying an average of $100 a year, make an effort to raise it to $200. Perhaps the quickest way to gain this end is by discarding all animals that fail to give five gallons of milk per day for the greater part of the year. The stock may be gradually improved by selection and breeding. It may be possible also to sell a part of the milk or cream to private customers who will pay double the wholesale rate.

It is not necessary that the farmer should replace all of his grade cows with high priced, pure bred Holsteins, Jerseys, Guernseys or Ayrshires. However, for successful and profitable dairying it is absolutely necessary that he realize the remarkable difference in productive capacity of the individual cows in the same herd, though these cows are cared for by the same man and are consuming practically the same amount of feed.

Recently a herd of hogs from the northwest was sold in one of the central markets for $8.50 per 100 pounds. A herd of similar size from a so called corn belt state sold in the same market on the same day for $7.95. The northwestern hogs were fed a variety, including barley, a liberal amount of alfalfa, a little ground wheat, some corn and some sugar beet sirup. The other herd of hogs was fattened almost exclusively on corn.

Not only did the northwestern hogs bring a higher price per 100 pounds, but they put on flesh more rapidly and economically than the others and were in every way more satisfactory. With the present knowledge of alfalfa growing no farmer, even in the strictly corn states, can find a reasonable excuse for not having some of this to feed his hogs.

Hogs need to run at large in a field where there is forage. This may be clover, alfalfa, rape or artichokes. In this way they attain growth and put on flesh better than they will if penned up. If they can have whey or skimmed milk once a day this will assist the economical production of meat. The aim must be to bring the hog up to 200 or 300 pounds at such a moderate cost that there will be a liberal profit when it is marketed.

With an abundance of hay and corn there ought to be a good profit in fattening beef animals, few or many, according to the size of the farm. It would appear that with the judicious selection of feeders, with the careful handling of the animals while in the feed lot and with an even break on other conditions, cattle feeding ought to be fairly profitable.

Farmers have come to realize the value of maintaining soil fertility and are using manure as liberally as possible. Land, to be made a source of continuous profit, must be kept fertile. The proper rotation of crops combined with the raising of live stock, will contribute largely in the maintenance of soil fertility.

Intelligent, painstaking effort, based upon the teachings of science, is the price of many farmers' success.

Farm and Garden

STORING WINTER VEGETABLES

Different Vegetables Should Be Treated in Different Ways.

Enough vegetables in the fall go to waste from the average farm garden to supply the table during the entire winter. The task of storing is not difficult if one has a knowledge of the conditions best suited for storage and is willing to perform a small amount of labor.

A dry, well aired, frost proof room, cellar or sodhouse will serve the purpose. The most favorable temperature is not over 50 degrees F. Celery, cabbage and sweet potatoes should be stored in the coolest part of the room. Racks should be adjusted on which to place the storage boxes or barrels. This avoids the dangers of overheating, excess moisture and prevents decay. All vegetables should be gathered before frost, sorted and thoroughly dried before packing. For long storing preserve those of most perfect formation and firm texture. Each root or tuber should be placed a few inches apart in alternate layers with clean, dry sand. In removing those for use care should be taken each time to recover any that may be exposed. The earth for packing should be clean and dry and should be collected in dry summer season rather than after the heavy fall rains. Carrots, sweet potatoes, beets, turnips, parsnips, cabbage, salsify and celery keep well stored by this method.

Vegetables less perfect in form, less firm in texture should be reserved for immediate use. These may be stored in barrels or boxes with latticed bottoms.

Sweet potatoes should be well dried, wrapped in paper, packed in sand as indicated, and kept in coolest part of store room. Celery should be taken from ground on a clear day, transferred to boxes of clean, dry sand. The tops and leaf portions should not be covered, but the bleached part should be well packed in the sand and placed in the coolest part of the storage room. Cabbage and cauliflower will keep for a long time if gathered

RURAL ORGANIZATION

That rural life should be organized and can be organized clear. Various agencies are nitely attacking its intellectual side. We are effectively saving rural physical improvement especially good roads. The country roads are prerequisite many important rural undertakings. They are prerequisite better marketing, for schools, for comfortable and for the promotion of a life.

There is obvious need of organization for sanitary purposes and for social development. Whether all these shall be through definite attack of state or public agencies or byproducts makes no difference; they must come. We no longer entertain the notion that rural life shall remain isolated, disjointed and unorganized. Its organization is a national, economic and social necessity. It is more difficult to organize a scattered rural population than a concentrated but the great need is to the rural population at least approximately the primary advantages which the town enjoys. The town is organization, because of its organization of its consequent advantage has tended to attract to it most ambitious youth of country. The task of rural organization is difficult, but a greatest educator of America has said, "The difficulty task constitutes no reason declining it." And in this lies the largest promise for national upbuilding and stabilization. David F. Houston, Secretary, Agriculture.

BANKERS AID RURAL

State and Federal Help Urged Direction.

Resolutions providing for the conditions of rural life in country, which it was stated decrease the burdens and increase opportunities of the farmer, were adopted at the annual meeting of the committee on cultural development and education of the American Bankers' association. Vocational training in the schools, plans to make the most of farm products easier and profitable and federal aid to farm demonstration work moral throughout the country among the things urged.

The resolutions in part follow: "Our committee, being concerned with agriculture and education in that line in the country, realizes that it needs and must the largest measure of aid to that the country boys and girls be placed on an equal footing with those in town. Therefore we urge state and federal aid in this direction."

wrapped in paper, packed in sand as indicated, and kept in coolest part of store room. Celery should be taken from ground on a clear day, transferred to boxes of clean, dry sand. The tops and leaf portions should not be covered, but the bleached part should be well packed in the sand and placed in the coolest part of the storage room. Cabbage and cauliflower will keep for a long time if gathered and stored with the head and roots intact. The large outside leaves should be removed. Each head should be surrounded with clean, dry straw and placed downward a few inches apart. Pack and store the same as celery.

If desired parsnips may be allowed to remain in the ground all winter. They should be covered in the fall with clean straw. After the early spring thaw they may be removed, washed and stored in a cool place.

Parsley and watercress may be transported to flowerpots or boxes and kept in good growing condition throughout the winter.

Tomatoes may be stored very late in the fall if the entire vine is carefully pulled up and hung over racks in the coolest part of the frostproof room, or the fruit may be picked from the vines and placed on racks several inches apart. By these methods a large portion of the green tomatoes will ripen and keep indefinitely.

If a frost proof storage place is not available, the trench method is satisfactory for storing cabbage, turnips, carrots, parsnips, salsify, beets, etc. A well drained location should be selected and the trench should be about seven feet deep. Clean straw should be filled in to the depth of about one foot. The trench may be divided in sections for each variety of vegetables. The cabbage should be arranged as previously mentioned. In filling the trench the earth should be firmly packed and well heaped. Two boards nailed together lengthwise to form a sloping roof should be placed over the top to shed rain and snow. Vegetables stored in a trench may freeze in a severe winter and remain frozen until the spring thaw. The gradual extraction of the frost leaves the vegetables uninjured, but a sudden thaw will greatly impair the texture and flavor.

The cost of vegetables grown out of season in greenhouses and available in all markets during the winter and early spring is so high as almost to prohibit their use by people of moderate means, except as a luxury. Therefore if more attention were paid in each home to the storage of a generous supply of winter vegetables the daily meals would be more easily planned, the daily diet be made more wholesome and one of the problems in the high cost of food supply would be practically overcome.—Professor M. A. Stoner, North Dakota Agricultural College.

WINTER FEED FOR FOWLS

An ample as well as a varied supply of green feed to hens during the winter is important for the health of fowls. Its value does not lie in the amount of nutriment it contains as an agent in digestion. Fowls grow more when fed green food than when fed dry food. Vegetables induce increased egg production, hence increased egg production.

Nearly all the common vegetables are relished by fowls, and they should be fed at regular intervals. Many are easy to raise and keep well. Cabbage is a good food; the hens like it and it does not flavor the egg. Turnips are an excellent vegetable for fowls when grown right, stored and cooked. Rape is an excellent food to plant in the runs. Potatoes are good only when boiled. As they are too expensive to feed to try. Onions, when they can be had, are an excellent feed and, like turnips, are excellent for chicks. Squash may be used, provided that on small quantity is fed at first until hens become thoroughly accustomed to it.

MABEL'S CHITCHAT

The Long Drawn Out Goodby at the Station.

MAKE YOUR DEVOIR QUICKLY.

"The Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady Are Sisters Under Their Skins." Difference In Their Viewpoints—Be Modish and Wear the New Sautoire.

Dear Elsa—The goodbys of women are funny things, aren't they? I went to the station recently to see Dick off on a trip, and there were two girls at the train making perfect spectacles of themselves and almost holding up the express with a lot of senseless "don't forget" conversation.

For such a little word, "goodbye" sometimes takes a long time to say.

These girls could not make up their minds to part even after the conductor's "All aboard!" rang warningly in their ears. They had said all there was to say, but the girl on the platform still kept adjuring her friend at the car window to write, and the latter shrieked her promises as long as the flutter of her handkerchief could be seen.

How much better it is to accept the fact of the traveler's departure, say your goodbye and leave the station before the train is actually in motion!

Then there is the woman visitor who insists upon lingering in the hall at the door and halfway down the front steps (letting in the winter winds or the summer mosquitoes) to prolong her conversation and to say what she might have said and probably did say two and a half hours before.

No, dear; there's nothing like saying goodbye and meaning it and acting upon the meaning. I know only one woman who does it. Not myself, oh, no! I'm not half so emancipated, more's the pity.

I must tell you, Elsa, an amusing story about a friend of mine, a young matron, who has an Irish laundress, a good and capable sort of person. Mary's spouse is also from the "ould country," but neither good natured nor it's another." The young matron raged inwardly and the subject was dropped.

Now the husband of my friend has a position which requires working at home. A few minutes after the conversation with Mary and her mistress the young husband called out to his wife: "Edith, dear, would you mind bringing me a glass of water? I can't get up without upsetting all my work."

"All right, just a minute," called back his wife and turned to get a glass. Then she beheld Mary, eyes flashing fire and arms akimbo. "The idea! That big man expecting a little woman like you to wait on him! He ought to be ashamed! I wouldn't stand for it!"

The young wife ran into her husband's study, where she sank on the couch and laughed hysterically.

"What is so laughable?" very naturally demanded the astonished man, and when she could speak his wife answered, "Her point of view."

Now for a little fashion gossip. Have you a sautoire? I know that you possess such a modish accessory, but you are probably still calling it a lorgnette chain. Be up to date and speak of your new ribbon, which is a quarter inch wide band of black grosgrain ribbon a yard long, as your "sautoire."

The smart sautoire is fitted with slides in brilliants or pearls, and I have a charming one with butterfly slides done in enamel. I gave mother a sautoire with slides in cut jet for a birthday present. I think it is most appropriate for an elderly woman.

But the very latest wrinkle in neck adornment is the silk cord of yard length and of a vivid shade of green or blue or red, supposed by the initiated to match the wearer's hosiery. In some cases it may. At all events it gives a dashing touch of color to the costume and also serves to display one of the new pear shaped pendants which come in pearl, amber, jet or brilliants, whichever one can afford.

Mme. Poirot, wife of the famous Parisian dressmaker, wore these cords with her gowns while in this country recently with her aristocratic husband.

Well, it's time to show up at a club meeting, so fare thee well until the next budget of news reaches you from yours devotedly, MABEL.

GOOD PIE CRUST.

Secret Lies In Having Pastry Cold and Oven Hot.

When making pie crust one must use the best lard, butter and sifted pastry flour. If possible have a marble slab for rolling out. Have the butter, lard and water as cold as possible, handle as little as possible, work quickly and keep the crust cold until it goes into the oven. All crust is greatly improved if mixed and placed in a bowl directly on the ice for five or six hours before using. The true secret of good crust is to have it icy cold and the oven very hot when the pie is first put into it.

For one ordinary pie with an upper and a lower crust, use six tablespoonfuls of sifted flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one generous tablespoonful of lard and a scant tablespoonful of butter, with sufficient ice water to hold the paste together. Sift the flour and salt together, and with a double chopping knife chop in the ice cold lard and butter. Do not mix with the fingers. Chop thoroughly until the flour resembles coarse meal; then very gradually add the ice water and mix with a wooden spoon to a paste that is not crumbly, but sticks together without adhering to the sides of the bowl. Now cover with a slightly damp napkin and set on the ice for four or five hours. When ready to make the pie divide the crust exactly in two with a sharp knife, dust the board and rolling pin lightly with flour to prevent sticking, but use no more flour than is absolutely necessary. Roll the crust out quickly into a very thin sheet, always rolling away from you, and be careful when you lay the paste in the well greased pie plate not to stretch it, but see that it covers the plate loosely. Roll the crust out quickly into a very thin sheet, always rolling away from you, and be careful when you lay the paste in the well greased pie plate not to stretch it, but see that it covers the plate loosely. Always brush the lower crust over with a little white of egg to keep the liquid from the filling from penetrating it.

Then put in the filling, wet the paste around the edge of the pie, lay on the upper crust, press the edges together with the tines of a silver fork and make several vents in the upper crust for the steam to escape. Brush over the top of the pie with a little milk (to give a good brown color), trim off the superfluous paste and bake in a very hot oven. If a lower pie crust only is to be made, as for lemon meringue pie, use half the recipe and prick the paste shell across the bottom to keep it from puffing up.

There are as usual many things to interest the sportsman in the latest issue of Rod and Gun in Canada, the March issue, which has recently come to hand. The Ojibways at Abitibi by Bernard Muddiman; A Walrus Hunt within the Arctic Circle; A Caribou Hunt in the Yukon; The Little Lake of the Big Trout; Angling Notes by H. Mortimer Batten; and other stories and articles, along with the regular departments devoted to the interests of the trap line, trap-shooting, and etc., which are as usual well maintained, are combined to make a magazine that should be read by all Canadian sportsmen and by those Americans who come to Canada annually for their hunting and fishing. This magazine which is the only publication devoted wholly to the interests of Canadian outdoor life is published by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont.

Died in Watertown.

After an illness of barely a week's duration, Mrs. Anna Dickson died early Saturday morning at the Sister's hospital. Death was due to blood poisoning. But two weeks before her death Mrs. Dickson, who was but a girl of twenty asked for her child, who is the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Storms of Huntington street. Although she was almost too weak to recognize any one, she greeted the child fondly and insisted on kissing and hugging her for several minutes before the foster mother took her away. Mrs. Dickson was originally Miss Anna Mowers, Selby, Ont. She came to this city several years ago, meeting and marrying Ernest Dickson, a former Antwerp railroad man. The couple did not live happily and when they became estranged, she brought the child to this city with her. On June 19th, 1913, she went to the Sisters' hospital for medical treatment. She was unable to care for the child, and at her suggestion, one of her friends took the two year old girl to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Storms, of Huntington street. The child was found by Mr. and Mrs. Storms the next morning, and was adopted by them. Several weeks ago Mrs. Dickson entered the employ of Ball & DeLong, proprietors of the Dillon House. She worked there until a week ago, when she took cold and complications set in which later led to blood poisoning and were the cause of her death. Besides the child Mrs. Dickson leaves her mother, Mrs. Clara Mowers, of Selby, Ont., and one sister, Miss Laura Mowers.

DAYS OF YORE.

Backward, turn backward, oh time
in your flight: give us a girl with skirts not so tight; give us a girl whose charm, many or few, are not so exposed by too much peek-a-boo;
give us a girl, no matter what age, who won't use the street for a vaudeville stage; give us a girl not so shapely in view, dress her in skirts that the sun can't shine through, and give us the dances of days now gone by, with plenty of clothes and steps not too high; put turkey trot capers and buttermilk glides, hurdy gurdy twists, and wiggle-tail slides and other such bunny hug roll on a level, as products of hell, inspired by the devil and then let us feast our optics once more on the pure sweet woman of the days of yore. Yes, Time turn backwards, and grant us our request, for God's richest blessing, but not so undressed.
